F A B

F † A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, (except in the preposition of, where it is pronounced like v), formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Icelandic alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

This letter is derived to us from the Romans, who adopted it from the Eolians; among whom it is called digamma. See DIGAMMA.

FA * [In music.] One of the notes or syllables, invented by Guido Aretine, to mark the fourth sound of the modern scale of music; do or ut, re, mi, fa.

On these eclipses do portend these divisions!
fa, sol, la, mi! Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FABA 'CREOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA 'BLE. n. s. [fable, Fr. fabule, Lat.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and so beautiful as any made since. Add. Spect.

VOL. II.

F A B

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almain's acres. Dryden.

I alludius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables.
I Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or texture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.

Addition, Spect.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so.

5. A lie; a vicious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addition.

To FA'BLE † v. n. [old Fr. fabler; Lat. fabulor.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That war'ring conquest still desires to revel
In Marfere's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Pr.

F A B

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie.

He fables not; I hear the enemy. Sh. Hen. VI.
To say verity, and not to fable;
We are a merry rout, or else a rabble,
Or company, or, by a figure, chorus,
That for thy dignity will dance a morris.

Benam, and Pl. Two Noble Kinsmen.
She fables not; I feel that I do fear
Her words set off by some superior power.

Milton, Comus.

To FA'BLE v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,
Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton, P. L.

Ladies of the Hesperides, they seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fah'd since
Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton, P. L.

FA'LEN. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'LER. † n. s. [from fable; old Fr. fableur.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories; "a teller of fables."

Hulot.

The courtier ought to give credit neither to funeral sermons, nor to Galibolgicus, or other such idle fakers. Stafford's Noble (1611.) p. 90.

The bold legends of lying fakers. Hop. Hall, Rem. p. 480.

To FA'BRICATE. † v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct; to frame.

Cockeram.

New fancied and new fabricated republics.
Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

B

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRIC'ATION, n. s. [from fabricare.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature.

FABRICATEUR, n. s. [Lat. fabricator, old Fr. fabricateur.] One who builds, constructs, or frames, Catg. and Sherwood.

The Almighty fabricator of the universe doth nothing in vain. Havell, Lett. iii. 9.

The translator or fabricator of the works of Ovid. Watson.

FABRIC'. † n. s. [fabric or fabricque, old Fr. fabric, Lat.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that to the solid may answer to the solid, and the varieties to the varieties, as well for beauty as strength of the fabric. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabric change;
Quit their old station and principal frame. Prior.

To FABRIC'. † v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

The discipline of Geneva framed and fabricated already to our hands. Milton, Areopagitica.

FABULIST, n. s. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.

They come in lamely, with their mouldy tales out of Boecio, like stale Tabarin, the fabulist.

For the most part, when better evidence fails us, we lay the crime to the charge of Fortune, who very fitly by the fabulist is represented with a great complaint in her mouth upon that occasion. Underly, Lett. North, to Par. (1692), p. 93.

Quoting Aesop and the fabulists, he copies Boecius.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garr.

FABULOSITY, n. s. [fabulosité, old Fr. fabulositas, Lat.] Fulsness of feigned stories; fabulous invention. Hulnot.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years.

Abbot, Description of the World.

FABULOUS, adj. [fabulosus, Lat.] Peign'd; full of fables, invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison, Spect.

FABULOUSLY, adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

These gods (Hymen, Comus, Hebe, &c.) so fabulously and foolishly made — they did celebrate in hymns. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 667.

Figuring the place from whence, as I have been, not fabulously, informed, the honourable family of the Basilisks first took their name.

B. Jonson, Measures at Court.

King Henry the Seventh — standing at the facade or western portal of a Gothic church. Watson.

FACE, n. s. [face, Fr. from facies, Lat.] 1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 25.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In every face I found a dart. Addison, Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kick'd out we set the best face on't we could. Dryden, Virg.

Seiz'd and lay'd down to judge, how wretched I! Who can't be silent, and who will not lye!

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace; And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing. A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing. The breadth of the face of the house, facing the East, was an hundred cubits. Exch. xli. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs. He look'd and saw the face of things quite changed.

The brazen throat of war loud caw'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and games,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton, P. L.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look. Keep still your former face, and mix again

With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em!

For such are treasons. B. Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,

Not lost 't, nor was, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange;

His trouble nature, & her vigour change. Waller.

His disfigure has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference.

7. Presence; right; state of confrontation. Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall lay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Yea cannot fear; yet tell me to my face, That I of all the gods am least in grace. of the Gm. 1673, p. 43.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking by his face, To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

How many things are there which a cowardly man with face or countenance, say or do himself!

A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done With ignorance and face. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tulston, Preface.

9. Distortion of the face. Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FACE TO FACE. [An adverbial expression.] 1. When both parties are present.

2. To turn the face; to come in front. Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy! Dryden.

These three the mounted squadrons ride around The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound;

Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain, Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd face. Dryden.

To FACE † v. a. 1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

They are as both to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence; commonly with down.

Here's a villain that would face me down. He met me on the mart. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

We trespass'd on the state, and face'd it down With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will, He face'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. With out also, which Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice.

Now, face out your matter with a card of ten. Halle, Yet a Courtier, &c. (1513), p. 59.

A mad-rag ruffian, and a swearing Jack, That thinks with oaths to face the matter out. Shakspeare, Tom. of the Shrew.

FACE'ILE, adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also these poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

Milton on Education.

To confuse the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of being in the cuckoo.

Glossology.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful.

Erskine, Kel.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,

Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet.

Beaumont & Fletcher, The Rival Rivals.

Haspel now, to Adam's doubt propound,

4. Pliant; flexible: easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much misgus;

Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair disguise.

Since Adam and his facile consort Eve

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts

no longer than till somewhat else comes in the way. Calany.

FACE'ILELY, adv. [from facile.] Easily. Holcot.

Seeing the one might be as facile impetrate as the other.

Ed. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 227.

FACE'ILENESS, n. s. [from facile.] Easiness to be persuaded to good or bad.

Alas,

That facile hearts should to themselves be foes,

When others they with *facile*ness befriended!

Bensons's Poesy, v. 175.

To FACE'ILATE, v. a. [faciliter, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty;

to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and platted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they did not many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution.

Dryden, Discrepancy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITATION, n. s. [from facilitate.]

The act of making easy, of freeing from impediments.

A facilitation towards fidelity.

W. Montague, Dev. Ess. P. 1. (1648), p. 118.

Who can believe that they, who first watched the course of the stars, forewarn the use of their discoveries to the facilitation of commerce, or the measurement of time? Johnson, Ramb., No. 105.

FAC'ILITY, n. s. [facilité, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason said, reason should have ability

To hold these worldly things in such proportion,

As let them come or go with even facility. Shakspeare.

They could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some to the choice.

Bacon, Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden, Discrepancy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then; but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the use of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.

FACINE'ROUS, adj. See FACINOROUS.

FAC'ING, n. s. [from to face.]

1. An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings

A garment which had a border at the bottom,

2. Simply, a covering.

Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and being the hills full and wide with white, more especially if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facings, they must have been visible at a vast distance. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 67.

FACINOROUS, adj. [Lat. facinus, facinoris.] In Shakspeare the corrupt spelling of facinorosis is found in an old copy of the play, which Dr. Johnson considers as the poet's own mistake in regard to the word. No example of facinorosis is given by Dr. Johnson;

but the word about Shakspeare's time was not uncommon. Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it, and he is of a most facie

norous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the very land of heaven. Shakespeare, All's Well.
The more facinorous malefactors.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. K. Rich. III. p. 28.
Things highly charged with sin, even to a more facinorous and notorious degree.

Rp. Taylor, Arif. Handum. p. 151.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous].
Wickedness in a high degree.

FACITMILE. n. s. [Latin: an abbreviation of factum simile, i. e. made like.] An exact copy.

You should publish these [examples of various modes of writing] in drawings, copied per factum simile. Pownall on Arif. Lett. to Dile. p. 178.

FACT. n. s. [faict, French; factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not to matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world. Hobbes.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the persuasion of the senses, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat sour or acid tilings, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Master of fact breaks out and labours with too great an evidence to be denied. South, Sermon.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation. If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison on the War.

Menfold sin, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Southbridge.

3. Action; deed. Unhappy man! to break the pious laws Of nature, pleading in his children's cause: How'er the doubtful fact is understood, 'Tis love of honour and his country's good: The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. s. [factiō, French; factio, Lat.]

1. A party in a state. The queen is valued third choice strong; If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He has been known to commit outrages, And cherish factions. Shakespeare, Timon.

By one of Simon's faction murders were committed. 2 Mac. iv. 5.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factions. King Charles.

And crop away that factious pale of his. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæsar.

2. Proceeding from public dissensions; tending to public discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warlike mind; and harangues are heard; but soon to factions opposition. Milton, P. L.

Factionists tumults overthrow the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same danger? Dryden, Just. Bell.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensionous or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented.

King Charles.

The factiousness, disobedience, and disorders of the nonconformists.

Pulten, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 459.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitious, Lat.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire, the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate. Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being essential to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTIVE. adj. [Lat. factus.] Having the power to make.

You are, creator-like, factive, not destructive.

Bacon, Lett. to James I.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, Fr. factor, Lat.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge

And kindly government of this your land;

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shaks. R. III.

Piercy is but my factor, good my lord,

T'engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

You all three,

The senators alone of this great world,

Chief factors for the gods. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.

Balguy, Apology.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at that time, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever bear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, wits and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away. South.

For'd into exile from his rightful throne, He made all countries where he came his own;

And viewing monarchs rulers of his sway, A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetic.] The multiplicator, and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORAGE. n. s. [from factor.] In commerce, wages or commission for agency in purchasing goods.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

They humbly conceive, that the settlement of chaplains in our British factories, at Smyrna and Aleppo, is allowed by the Turks, as a right due by the law of nations. Merchants at Leghorn, Pet. to Q. Anne, 1710.

3. A place where any thing is made. Our corrupted hearts are the factories of the devil, which may be at work without his presence. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 20.

FACTOTUM. n. s. [fact totum, Lat.] It is used likewise in burlesque French. A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

Typ. Art though the dominus?

Heat. Factotum here, Mr. B. Johnson, New Tan.

FACTURE. n. s. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing; workmanship. Coggrave, and Sherwood.

There is no doubt but that the facture, and framing of the inward parts, is a full of difference as the outward. Bacon on Learning, B. 2.

FACTULTY. n. s. [factult, Fr. factultas, Lat.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporeal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hosker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides, Rather than heads, their faculty hides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end Of nature, her inferior; in the mind And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton, P. L.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Locke.

Neither our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. Mechanical power.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Wittius.

4. [In physic.] A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind. Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Cherodan.

Our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not find it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6 Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

7. Natural virtue; efficacy.

He would— in requital ope his leathern scrip, And shew me simples of a thousand names, Telling their strange and various faculties. Milton, Comus.

FA'DE,* adj. [French.] Faint; insipid. Tar-water may extract from clay a fade sweetness, offensive to the palate. Br. Berkeley on Tar-water.

To FADE,† v. n. [fade, French, insipid, languid, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather the Latin vado; and the primary sense of fade, formerly written also vade, is to disappear instantaneously; of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.]

1. To disappear instantaneously. See also To VADRE.

He stands amazed how he thence should fade. Spenser, F. Q. i. l. 15.

It faded on the crowing of the cock. Sh. Ham.

2. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

His imperfect good desires, his fading resolutions. South, Sermon, viii. 51.

3. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald. Hagie on Colours.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually. Woodward on Faculae.

4. To wither, as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Is. i. 30.

5. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Adams, Cato.

6. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.

The glorious beauty on the head of the fair valley shall be a fading flower. Is. xlviii. 4.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Narcissus' change to the vain virgin shows Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay, Fob.

To FADE, v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered; And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakspeare.

His palms, though under weights they did not stand, Sull thriv'd; oo winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.

Restless anxiety, fatigue despair, And all the faded family of care. Garth, Dispensary.

To FADGE,† v. n. [fægezan, Saxon; fagen, German.]

1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly, And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shaks.

Close I must get, this fashion will not fadge with me. Bacon, and Fl. Wit without Money.

2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.

They shall be made, spite of antipathy, to fadge together. Milton, Dict. and Duogyl. of Divorce.

When they thriv'd they never fadge'd; But only by the ears engag'd; Like dogs that curl about a bone, And play together when they've none. Hudibras.

3. To succeed; to hit.

All this will not fadge! Milton, Reason of Church Gov. B. i.

The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange.

4. This is a mean word not now used; unless perhaps in ludicrous and low companies.

FADGE,* n. s. [Sw. fagga, onerare.] A bundle, as of sticks. A northern word. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

FA'DING,* n. s. [from fade.] Decay; weakness; loss of strength. Sherwood.

FA'DINGNESS,* n. s. [from fading.] Decay; prolixity to fade.

The fadingness of beauty is the greatest detector and impeachment of our frailty. W. Montague, Des. Lin. P. II. (1654), p. 291.

Since it [joy] was merely earthly, it must needs partake of the fadingness of its original. Deacy of Chr. Pity, (1667), p. 303.

FA'DY,* adj. [from fade.] Wearing away; decaying.

Survey those walls in fady texture clad. Shenstone, Economy, P. III.

FÆ'CES,* n. s. [Latin.] Excrements; settlements after distillation and infusion. Quincy.

To FAGE,* See To FUFF.

To FA'UBLE,* v. n. [Of uncertain etymology; unless a corruption of famble, which is probable. See To FANBLE.]

To stammer. Barret's Alveaire, 1580, where under the present word reference is made to stammer; and there muffle occurs in the definition. Thus in the north of England faffle and muffle are both used to denote hesitating in speech.

To FAG,† v. n. [fagito, Latin, or perhaps from the Sw. fagga, onerare. See FADGE.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.

Medyll thou not ferber, but let hyso gume, Make be sever us pyttone a none; For then the fox can fage and fayne. When he wold faynyth his prey at anyore.

Old Poem in Asynath's Themat. Chem. 1659, p. 159. Creighton with-held his force till the Italian began to fage, and then brought him to the ground. Mechanic's Lives.

To FAG,* v. a.

1. To tire; to weary. A Cumberland word.

2. To beat. A vulgar expression.

FAG,* n. s. [from the verb.] A slave; one who works hard. It is a colloquial expression; nor is fag, either as a verb or substantive in this sense, seriously used by good writers.

From the above teasing and tormenting the junior scholars, has originated the present custom of laving fags at Eton school, &c. i. little boys who are the slaves of the greater ones. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FAG,* n. s. [perhaps from the Sax. fægan, to join together.] A knot or excrescence in cloth, used in the stat. 4 Edw. IV. c. 1. It is also used for the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth. See FAGEND.

FAGE'ND,* n. s. [from fag and end.]

1. The end of a web of cloth, generally made of coarser materials.

2. In naval language, the end of any rope untwisted by frequent usage, which is secured from being further loosened by winding a piece of small line round it.

3. The refuse or meaner part of any thing. The lichen, and gutters, and other offices of noise and drudgery, are at the fage-end. Howell, Lett. (1619), i. li. 8.

At the worlds fag-end— Fanshott, Poems, p. 318.

A land—do lie. Fanshott, Poems, p. 318.

It seems, Mr. Hobbes, by the fig-ur of your book Of Liberty in English, that you take a mind to say your lesson. Watts, Corrector of H. p. 1.
When they are the worst of their way, and last in the fig-ur of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them.

Collier on Emu.
FAGOT. † n. s. [fagot, Welsh and Armoric; fagot, French. Consequence pretends that the word comes from the Lat. fagus, a beech-tree, the first fagots being, as he says, made of the wood of this tree. Others think it connected with the Lat. fasciculus, a bundle; fascicularia, bundles of wood.]

1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.

About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame.

Spenser for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pity's barrels on the fatal stake.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
Mistress or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts on the Mind.

2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.

The Black Prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Adrian.

3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.

There were several other counterfeit books upon the upper shelves, which were carved in wood, and served only to fill up the number like fagots in the muster of a regiment.

Adrian, Spect. No. 37.
To FA'GOT. v. a. [from the noun.]
To tie up; to bundle together.

He was too warm on picking-work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhyed it and rained, all was well.

Dryden, in the same, and delect.
To FAIL. v. n. [failir, French; faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]

1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.

The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up.
Job, xiv. 11.

Wherefore should not strength and might
There fail where virtue faels, or weakest prove
Where boldest, though to fight unequal?

Where the credit and money faels, barter alone mix'd do.

2. To be extinct; to cease; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful faels from among the children of men.

Whether such virtue spent of old now faels d,
More angels to create.

3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.

By fate the strength of gods
And this empyreal substance cannot fael.

Milton, P. L.
For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal feat display'd,
Lost the remembrance of his grief should fael.

Adrian.
4. To die; to lose life.

Had the king in his last sickness fael'd,
Their heads should have gone off.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
Both he that belpeth shall fall, and he that is helper shall fall down, and they all shall be together.

5. To sink; to be born down; to come to an end.

Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fael before me. Is. lvii. 16.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fael,
Dependant made. Milton, P. L.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.

Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve
The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fael.

Milton, P. L.
I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fael; objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense.

Milton, P. L.
7. To miss; not to produce its effect.

Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is divisible, but as a cause which seldom faels of the effect.

Bacon.
All these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied heav'n, shall fael to re-ascend.

Milton, P. L.
This post was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fael'd of things.

Locke.
A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom faels to carry us through them.

Locke.
He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few fael'd.

Mortimer, Husbandry.
8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoind, by oath, if I fael
Of the right cockpit, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
At least our curious for hath fael'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious. Milton, P. L.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of faelings proceeds from failings in the administration.

L'Estrange.
Men who have been basised in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have fael'd in their design.

Adrian, Guardian.
9. To be deficient in duty.

Or Nature fael'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain.

Milton, P. L.
Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fael of it, and to hope for pardon of him.

Wals.
To FAEL.† v. a.

1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune faels them.

Solency.
But little will such guide thee now avail,
If wanted force and fortune do not meet me fael.

Spenser, F. Q.
There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, men's hearts faeling them for fear.

Locke.
Nor could the mouse defend
Her son; so fael not thou who thee implor'st.

Milton, P. L.
I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venture, if that fall them, shrink and fear.

Milton, P. L.
Her heart fael'd her, and she would fain have compounded for her life.

L'Estrange.
He presumes upon his parts that they will not fael him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision before hand.

Locke.
2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature faels us in no needful things,
Why want I means my inward self to see?

Darwin.
3. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive god who over faels his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warns the heart.

Dryden.
4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fael there a man on the throne.

1 Kings, ii. 4.
5. To deceive; to cheat. [A Latinism, fallere.] Obsolete.

So lively and so like, that living sense it fael'd.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 46.
FAIL.† n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. faillir, a fault.]

1. Miscarriage; miss; unsuccesfulness.

2. Omission; non-performance.

Mark and perform it, seest thou? for the fael
Of any point it shall not only be Death to itself, but to thy lewd tongue a wife.

Shakespeare, Jos. iii. 10.
He will without fael drive out from before you the Canaanites.

3. Deficiency; want.

And Godly and gallant shall be false and perjur'd
From thy great fael.

Shakespeare, Cymb.
4. Death; extinction.

How gounded be his tide to the crown
Upon our fael? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FA'ILANCE.† n. s. [Old Fr. faillance.] Omission; fault.

Our faillances and aberrations.

Decay of Chr. Piety, Pref.
FA'ILER.* See FAILLURE.

FA'ILING.† n. s. [from fael.]

1. Decay.

A crumbling heart, and faeling of eyes, and sorrow of mind.

Heast, xxviii. 65.
2. Deficiency; Imperfection; fault not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what faelings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities.

Digby.
To faelings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head and the sincerest heart.

Pope.
Even good men have many temptations to valde, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many faelings and lapses to lament and recover.

Rogers.
FA'ILURE.† n. s. [from fael.] Formerly the word was failler; which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. "Armour of proof I have not any, wherewith to hide the failers of this undertaking." Pref. to Biblioth. Regina, 1659.

1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season.

Hosford.
2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a nervous accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory.

South.
3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN.† adj. [Icel. feign, Su. fagna, Goth. fagnan, to be glad, to rejoice; Sax. fagnan, the same, and fagn, glad.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. It thus occurs also among the words of our northern counties given by Ray; and was thus formerly in our lexicography; "to be fayne or well pleased." Prompt. Parv.

What is rendered fain in one of our translations of the Psalms, is in the other greatly rejoice.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Wherein her face she often viewed fain.

Spenser, F. Q.

My lips will be fain when I slog into you,
And so will my soul when thou hast delivered.

Psalms lxxi, 21.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as "I was fain to do this," would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of war. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every wight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

Spenser.

Whosoever will hear, he shall find God, who soever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe.

Hooker.

I was fain to forewear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

When Hildebrand had accused Henry IV.
there were none so hardy as to defend their lord;
wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand.

Rulph, Essay.

The heroed Castilio was fain to take trenchers at Basle, to keep himself from starving.

Luch.

FAIN, adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly;
very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death.

Shakespeare.

Why would'st thou urge me to confute a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal.

Addison, Cato.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art release,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse.

Addison.

The plebeians would fain have a law coerced to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level.

Swift.

To FAIN, v. n. [from the noun.] To wish;
to desire fondly.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he could see's felicity.

Spenser, Hymn on Love.

To FAINT, v. n. [Dr. Johnson adopts, with Minshew and Skinner, the French faner, to fade, to wither, to die, as the origin of our word. Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces faint to be the past participle of the Sax. fingean, which means, to grow musty, to spoil, to decay.]

1. To decay; to wear or waste away quickly.

Gilded clouds, while we gaze upon them, faint before the eye, and fly into confusion.

Pope.

The show'ry arch
Delights and puzzles the beholder's eyes,
That views the wat'ry bed with thousand shows
Of painted vary'd; yet unskill'd to tell
Or where one colour rises, or where one faints.

Philips.

2. To lose the animal functions; to sink motionless and senseless.

The young children were out of heart, and their women and young men fainted for thirst and fell down.

Judith, vii, 22.

Wo were ready to faint with fasting.

Mae. iii, 17.

Upon hearing the honour intended her, she fainted away, and fell down as dead.

Guardian.

Ecclus. xlii, 10.

The imagination cannot be always alike constant and strong, and if the success follow not speedily it will faint and lose strength.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

O pity and shame, that they who to live well,
Enter'd so fair, should two aside to tread

Milton, P. L.

How while the fainting Dutch remally retire,
And the aid Eugene's iron troops retire.

Smith.

4. To sink into dejection.

At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
All terror hid.

Milton, P. L.

To FAINT, v. a. To deject; to depress;
to enfeeble. A word little in use.

It faints me.

To think what follows. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

FAINT, adj. [faune, French.]

1. Languid; weak; feeble.

To intertemperate climates, the spirits, exhaled by heat or compressed by cold, are rendered faint and sluggish.

Temple.

Words pronounced at length, sounded faint and languid.

Swift.

2. Not bright; not vivid; not striking.

The blue compared with this is a faint and dark colour, and the indigo and violet are much darker and fainter.

Newton.

The length of the image I measured from the faintest and utmost red at one end, to the faintest and utmost blue at the other end, excepting only a little penumbra.

Newton, Opticks.

From her naked limbs of glowing white,
To fields loose floating fell the fainter lawn.

Thomson.

3. Not loud; not piercing.

The pump after this being employed from time time, the sound grew fainter and fainter.

Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony;
But in their servile hearts they own Octavius.

Dryden.

6. Dejected; depressed.

Consider him that endureth such contradiction against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint to your minds.

7. Not vigorous; not active.

The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government.

Darwin on Ireland.

- FAINTHEARTED, adj. [faint and heart.]

Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted.

In. vii, 4.

They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there, an faint-hearted coward, to end their days.

Ankles, Hist. of the Turks.

Now the late fainthearted rout,
Of cowardice and wretchedness round about,
Charg'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fa'd about.

Hudibras.

Villain, stand off! base, grovelling, wretched wretches, Mongrels in faction, poor fainthearted traitors.

Addison, Cato.

- FAINTHEARTEDLY, adv. [from faint.]

hearted.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

Sherwood.

FAINTHEARTEDNESS, n. s. [from faint-hearted.] Cowardice; timorousness; want of courage.

Sherwood.

There is no hold of faintheartedness, no lock against falsehood.

Archib. Armstrong, Table of Meds. (1661), p. 44.

FAINTING, n. s. [from faint.] Deliquium; temporary loss of animal motion.

fainting silly creature.

Arbuth. Hist. of J. Bull.

FAINTLY, adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secured from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:

Expos'd to storm of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out.

Walt.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn

Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it.

Shakespeare, A. Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind.

Watts.

4. Without strength of body.

With his toll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,
His warm breath blows her fix up as the lie.

Dryden.

5. Not vigorously; not actively.

Though still the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly beguile us one hour in a month.

Shakespeare, Henry VI.

6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.

Loth was the ape, though praised, to adventure;
Yet faintly gain into his room to enter.

Spenser, Hobb. Tale.

He faintly now devotes the fatal strife;
So much his love was deeper than his life.

Deah.

FAINTNESS, n. s. [from faint.]

1. Languor; feebleness; want of strength.

As she was speaking, she fell down from faintness.

Edw. xv, 15.

If the prince of the lights of heaven, which now as a giant doth run his unwearied courses, should through a languishing faintness begin to slack.

Hooker.

2. Inactivity; want of vigour.

This evil proceeds rather of the unsoundness of the councils, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal cause appointed of God.

Spenser.

3. Timorousness; dejection.

Upon them, that are lest alive of you, I will send a faintness into their hearts to the laud of their enemies, and the sound of a shaken leaf shall cease them. Letic. xvi. 36.

The palaces of this flow'r Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

FA'INTY.† adj. [from faint.] Weak; feeble; languid; debilitated; enfeebled.

Esoo — was fainty.

Genesis, xiv. 29. Matthew's Tread.

When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The faintly root can take no steady hold. Dryden.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
The faintly knights were sorer'd, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryd.

FAIR.† adj. [presep, Saxon; fair, Danish; fager, Goth. Feg, in our northern dialect, is fair.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptance to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.
He only fair, and with fair hath made,
All other fair-like flowers unsmiling fade. Spenner.
Thou art a fair woman to look upon. Gen. xii. 11.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why nature, drawing of an antic,
Made a fool blot. Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Let us look upon men in several climates;
The Ethiopians are black, stout, and crisp-haired;
The Moors tawny; the northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

3. Pleasing to the eye; excellent or beautiful in general to the eye or mind.

That which made her fairness much the fairer
That it was but an ambassador of a most fair mind. Sedney.

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures. Shakespeare.

Thus was fair in his greatness, and in the length of his branches. Ezek. xxi. 7.

For as by depositions waters proclaim
The fairest fountains, so these the fairest fane. Young.

4. Clear; pure; clean.

A standard of a damask rose, with the root on,
was set in a chamber where no fire was, upright in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot under the water. Alcaen.

The table, at the communion time, having a fair
white linen cloth upon it. Rubrick, Common Prayer.

Even fair water, falling upon white paper or linen,
will immediately alter the colour of them,
and make it sadder than that of the unwetted papers. Boyle on Colours.

5. Not cloudy; not foul; not tempestuous.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and fitful air. Shak. Merch.

Fair weather cometh out of the earth. Job, xxxvii. 22.

About three of the clock in the afternoon the weather was very fair and very warm. Clerendon.

6. Favourable; prosperous; as, a fair wind.

You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

7. Likely to succeed.

Yoursell, renowned prince, stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd 'on yet,
For my affection. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The Caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out. Reliquie, Emper.

O pity and shame, that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faulst. Milt. P. L.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clerendon.

9. Not effected by any invidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests, he passed the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts; as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious every man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel spray;
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and being by fair means wrought therewith, acknowledged King Henry.
Spenner on Ireland.

For to reduce her by male force,
Is now in vain; by fair means worse. Hudibras.

13. Mild; not severe.

That they do sound so fair! Shaksp. Michels.
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be brought in our

14. Pleasing; civil.

Good art, why do you start, and seem to fear
That they do sound so fair? Shaksp. Michels.
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be brought in our

15. Equitable; not injurious.

His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return. Milton, P. L.

16. Commodious; easy.

Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot. Shakespeare.

I looked for the jocular veins, upend the fairest, and took away a dozen ounces of blood. Wicman.

17. Liberal; not narrow.

He though his virtue was as free from greediness,
as through his fair livelihood far from mendacity. Cervens.

FA'IR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes stealthily forward, is a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than be that runs after every one, though he gallop. Luthe.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair. Shakespeare.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stoop'd his mouth with a crust. L' Etrangere.

In this plain fable you'll effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatterers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair. Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made:
Thus fair they parted till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And sooth my heart with pleasing prophecies. Dryden.

This promised fair at first. Addison on Italy.

3. Happily; successfully.

O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee;
Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. On good terms.

There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier on Popularity.

FA'IR.† n. s.

1. A beauty; elliptically, a fair woman.

Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,
He sought the conversation of the fair. Dryden, Fob.

Gentlemen who do not design to marry, yet pay their devours to one particular. Spectator.

2. Honesty; just dealing.

I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves: fair and square, Nic, keeps friends together. Arbutnot.

3. Fairness, applied to things. Not now
in use.

As the green meads, whose native outward fair
Breathes sweet perfumes into the neighbouring air. Marston, Satires.

4. Fairness, applied to persons. Obsolete.

Pope changed the word, in the first of the following passages, without authority, to face.
Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Roanald. Shak. At you like it.

My decay'd fair
A sunny look of his would soon repair. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

FAIR.† n. s. [old Fr. fiere; modern fiere;
feriat, or forum, Lat.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traffic more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.

With silver, iron, tin, and lead they traded in thyr fairs. Ezek. xxxvii. 12.

His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryd.

The earliest Nundine, or fiere Rome, was kept every ninth day; afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls. Arbutnot on Cato.

FA'IRING. n. s. [from fair.] A present given at a fair.

Sweetheart, I shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in. Shakespeare, Lear. Lab. Lost.

Like children that esteem every trifle, and prefer a fairing before their fathers. R. Jonan.

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arise.
How pedlars stalk with glitt'ring toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country made. Gay, Pastorals.

FA'IRISH.† adj. [from fair.] Reasonably fair; passable; so so.

Cotgrave in V. Bellastre.

FA'IRLY.† adv. [from fair.] Sax. pregelice.]

1. Beautifully; as, a city fairly situated.

2. Commodiously; conveniently; suitably to any purpose or design.

How ye away that inhabitant of Saphir, [in the margin, thou that dwellest fairly.] Micah, i. 11.

Waiting till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they stand aside,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

5. Honestly; justly; without shift; without fraud; not foully.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some contemderation and gracing where cases are fairly pleaded. Bacon.
To the first advantages we may fairly lay claim; I wish we had as good a title to the latter.

Attorney.
It is a church of England man's opinion, that the freedom of a nation consists in an absolute unlimited legislative power, wherein the whole body of the people are fairly represented, and in an executive duly limited. Swift.

4. Ingeniously; plainly; openly.
The stage born loudly of its trade,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed! Pope.

5. Candidly; without sinister interpretations.
As I interpret fairly your design,
So look not with severer eyes on mine. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

6. Without violence to right reason.
Where I have enlarged them, I desire the false critics would not always think that those thoughts are wholly mine; but that either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him.

Dryden.
This nutritious juice being a subtle liquor, scarce obtainable by a human body, the serum of the blood is fairly substituted in its place. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. Without blots.
Here is 'tis indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

8. Completely; without any deficiency.
All this they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king. Spenser on Irish.
Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it is, fairly done, no matter. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Our love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and call it fairly out. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

9. Softly; gently.
But sober Guyon hearing him so sayle,
Though somewhat moved in his mighty heart,
Yet with strong reason master'd passion's frailty,
And passed fairly forth. Spenser, F. Q. B. vi. 40.

But here she comes; I fairly step aside,
And harken, if I may, her business here. Milton, Comus.

- FA'IRNESS, n. s. [from fair, Sax. fæþr, fæþer.]
1. Beauty; elegance of form.

That which made her fairness much the fairer,
was that it was but a fair embassador of a most fair mind, full of wit and a wit which delighted more to judge itself than to show itself. Sidney.

2. Honesty; candour; ingenuity.
There may be somewhat of wisdom, but little of goodness or fairness in this conduct. Arbuthnot, Serm. Pref.

3. Clearness; not foulness; as "fairness of weather."
Barret.

- FA'IRNESS, n. s. [from fair and speech.]
Bland and civil in language and address.

Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a subleutiant and a marvellous fairperson man, but discontented that we should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

- From his cradle
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one,
Exceeding wise, fairperson. Shakspeare, Ham. VIII.

These his fairperson words shall be here fairly confronted. Milton, Edenoclastes.

- FA'IRY, n. s. [from fair, Sax. fæþr, fæþer.]
1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fair favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

2. Enchantment.
To this great fairy I'll commend thy nets,
Make her thanks bleed thee. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

- FA'IRY, adj.
1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fair favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

2. Belonging to fairies.
This is the fairy hand; oh, spirit of spirits,
We talk with goblins, owls, and evil spirits. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

- FA'IRYLIKE, adj. Imitating the practice of fairies.
Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairylike, to pinch the unclean knight. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

He is one of the fairperson swordmen that David speaks of, "whose words are softer than butter, and yet are their very words."

Hammond, Works, lv. 470.

- FA'IRY, n. s. [from fair, Sax. fæþr, fæþer.]
French. "Ab ipsa terra, fit & ipse Macedoniam dialecto; unde fæþr, fæþer, & Romanis inferi, qui Scoto-Saxonibus dicuntur feries, nostratque corruptus fæþer, corruptum inferi, nunc dit manes." Baxter's Glossary.

So far Dr. Johnson. But the Sax. fæþr does not apply in the sense of a spirit to these pretended beings; for it means the mind or soul. Perhaps the old Fr. fæþer, a fantom, a spectre, is the parent of our word. The French word is sometimes written ferie, and Borel derives it from the ancient fæe, a nymph, and also a divineress. The French have likewise the old verb faer, to enchant. See La Combe and Roquefort. Probably from the Lat. fatuor. "Par færie," says Cotgrave, is "by appointment of the fairies;" which also he renders fatal and destined. Some indeed suppose the Lat. fatum to be the etymon; whence fata, in Italian, a fairy, witch, or enchantress; and the low Lat. fada, a kind of demon. The French fae or fæe is also found to have been used for a diviner or enchanter. The Irish fáith is a foreteller, a prophet. Fairy has been, after all, considered as derived from the east, that is, from the peri, the imaginary beings of the Persians. See Eliv and FAY.

1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.

Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white. Shakspeare.

Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairylike too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred past he dares to trespass.
In shape prophane. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

By the idea any one has of fairies, or courtiers, he cannot know that things, answering those ideas, exist. Locke.

Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, how Fairylike, like enough. Brown and Fl. Maid's Tr.

FA'IRY, n. s. [from fair, Sax. fæþr, fæþer.]
1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fair favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

2. Enchantment.
To this great fairy I'll commend thy nets,

FA'IRY, adj.

"Par færie," says Cotgrave, is "by appointment of the fairies;" which also he renders fatal and destined. Some indeed suppose the Lat. fatum to be the etymon; whence fata, in Italian, a fairy, witch, or enchantress; and the low Lat. fada, a kind of demon. The French fae or fæe is also found to have been used for a diviner or enchanter. The Irish fáith is a foreteller, a prophet. Fairy has been, after all, considered as derived from the east, that is, from the peri, the imaginary beings of the Persians. See Eliv and FAY.

1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.

Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white. Shakspeare.

Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairylike too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred past he dares to trespass.
In shape prophane. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

By the idea any one has of fairies, or courtiers, he cannot know that things, answering those ideas, exist. Locke.

Fairylike, like enough. Brown and Fl. Maid's Tr.

FA'IRY, n. s. [from fair, Sax. fæþr, fæþer.]
1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fair favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

2. Enchantment.
To this great fairy I'll commend thy nets,
Make her thanks bleed thee. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

FA'IRY, adj.
1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fair favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

2. Belonging to fairies.
This is the fairy hand; oh, spirit of spirits,
We talk with goblins, owls, and evil spirits. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FA'IRYLIKE, adj. Imitating the practice of fairies.
Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairylike, to pinch the unclean knight. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

FA'IRYSTONE, n. s. [from fair and stone.] A stone found in gravel pits.

FA'IRIBLE, * See FEASIBLE.

FA'ITH, n. s. [from faith, French; feide, Italian; fides, Latin. So Dr. Johnson traces our word. Mr. Horne Tooker asserts, that it is the third person singular of the indicative of the Sax. verb fægan, to engage, to covenant, viz. fægð; and that our word was formerly written faith, which indeed was common enough. Others consider it as connected with the Greek weis, persuasion, belief.]

1. Belief of the revealed truths of religion.

The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs have reference unto some uttered word, as the object of belief. Hooker.

Faith, if it have not roots, is dead. Jer. ii. 17.
Vision in the next life is the perfecting of that faith in this life, or that faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying.

Hammond, Præc. Catechism.
Then faith shall fall, and holy hope shall die;
One lost in certainty, and one in joy. Prior.

2. The system of revealed truths held by the Christian church, the credenda.
Felix heard Paul concerning the faith. Acts, xiv. 24.

This is the catholic faith. Ath. Creed, Conv. Pr.

3. Trust in God.
Faith is an entire dependence upon the truth, the power, the justice, and the mercy of God; which dependence will certainly incline us to obey him in all things. Swift.

4. Tenet held.
Which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason, without miracle,
Should never plant in us. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

5. Trust in the honesty or veracity of another.

6. Fidelity; unshaken adherence.
Her falling, while her faith to me remains,
I should conceal. Milton, P. L.

7. Honour; social confidence.
For you alone
I broke my faith with injur'd Palamon. Dryden, Knights of the Tale.

8. Sincerity; honesty; veracity.
Sincere, faith, in mere verity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
They copy a very forward generation, children in whom is no faith. Deut. xxxiii. 20.

9. Promise given.
I have been sworn,
In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd. Shakspeare, Tit. And.

FA'ITH, * adv. A colloquial expression, meaning in truth, verily, on my faith.

Faith, like enough. Brown and Fl. Maid's Tr.

FA'ITHBREACH, n. s. [from faith and breach.]
Breach of fidelity; disloyalty; perjury.

Now minutely reviveth upbraid his faithbreach;
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FA'ITHED, adj. [from faith.] Honest; sincere. A word not in use.

Thou bestard! would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faithed. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FA'ITHFUL, adj. [from faith and full.]
1. Firm in adherence to the truth of religion.

To good saints which are at Ephesus, and the faithful in Christ Jesus. Eph. i. 1.

Be thou faithful unto death, and thou shalt receive a crown of life. Rev. ii. 10.

2. Of true fidelity; loyal; true to the allegiance or duty proffered.

I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgement,
And by that name must die; yet, heav'n bear witness,

And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the axe falls, if I be not faithful.

So spake the seraph Abdiel, faithful found;
Among the faithless, faithful only he. Milt. P. L.

5. Honest; upright; without fraud.
My servant Abdiel is faithful in all mine house.

6. Observant of compact or promise; true to his contract; sincere; veracious.
Well I know him!

Of easy temper, naturally good,
And faithful to his word. Dryd. Don Sebast.

7. True; worthy of belief; that may confidently be relied on.
It is a faithful saying; for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him. 2 Tim. ii. 11.

FAITHFULLY, adv. [from faithful.]
1. With firm belief in religion.
Thus shall ye go in the fear of the Lord, faithfully, and with a perfect heart. 2 Chron. xix. 9.

Beloved, thus doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers.

2. With full confidence in God.
He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. John. xix. 28.

3. With strict adherence to duty and allegiance.
His noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd his most fortunes faithfully.

4. Without failure of performance; honestly; exactly.
If on my wounded breast thou drop a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfil,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryd. Ovid.

5. Sincerely; with strong promises.
For his own part, he had faithfully promise to be still in the king's power. Bacon, Hen. VII.

6. Honestly; without fraud, trick, or ambiguity.
They suppose the nature of things to be truly and faithfully signified by their names, and therefore believe as they hear, and practice as they believe. South, Serm.

7. In Shakespeare, according to Warburton, fervently; perhaps rather confidently; steadily.
If his occasions were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shak. Tim.

FAITHFULNESS, n. s. [from faithful.]
1. Honesty; veracity.
For there is no faithfulness in my mouth;
their inward part is very wickedness. Ps. v. 9.

The bond that knits together and supports all compacts, is truth and faithfulness. South.

2. Adherence to duty; loyalty.
The same soul and faithfulness continues in your blood, which animated one of your noble ancestors to sacrifice his life in the quarrel of his sovereign. Dryden.

FAITHLESS, adj. [faith, and less.]
1. Without belief in the revealed truths of religion; unconverted.
Whosoever our hearts be to God and to his truth, believe we, or we are yet faithless, for our conversion or confirmation, the force of natural reason is great. Hooker.

Never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless she doth it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Perfidious; disloyal; not true to duty, profession, promise, or allegiance.

Both
Fell by our servants, by those men we wot most;
A most unnatural and faithless service.

Abdiel, faithful found;
Among the faithless. Milton, P. L.

FAITHLESSNESS, f. n. s. [from faithless.]
1. Treachery; perfidy.
Fair Italy's faithlessness. Donne, Poems, p. 148.

Sharp are the pangs that follow faithlessness.
Edwards, Con. of Crit. p. 318.

2. Unbelief as to revealed religion.
FAITHOUR, f. n. s. [Norm. Fr. faïtour, sometimes a slothful person, sometimes a factor. Minshew pretends that it is a corruption of faisseurs, i. e. factores, doers. Dr. Johnson merely notices faïtare as the supposed original, which means idle, slothful.] A scoundrel; a rascal; a mean fellow; a poltroon; a vagabond; an evil doer. Obsolete.

These faïtours little regard their charges,
While they, letting their sheep run at large,
Passen their time, that should be sparingly spent,
In lustre and wanton merriment.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.
Into new wares unwetting I was cast,
By this false faïtour. Spenser, F. M.

Down! down, dogs! down, faïtours!
Shakespeare, C. Hen. IV. P. II.

Another took the gain;
Faïtour! that reap't the pleasure of another's pain.
P. Fletcher, Pic. Ecol. i. 12.

FAKE, n. s. [Among seamen.] A coil of rope.

FA'IR. See FAQUIR.

FALCADE, n. s. [from falx, falx, Latin.] A horse is said to make falcaides when he throws himself upon his haunches two or three times, as in very quick curvets; therefore a falcaide is that action of the haunches and of the legs, which bend very low, when you make a stop and half a stop. Farrier's Dict.

FALCATED, adj. [falcat, Latin.] Hooked; bent like a reaping hook or scythe.

The enlightened part of the moon appears in the form of a sickle, or reaping hook, which is while she is moving from the conjunction to the opposition, or from the new moon to the full; but from full to a new again, the enlightened part appears gibbous, and the dark falcat.

FALCATION, n. s. [falx, Latin.] Crookedness; form like that of a reaper's hook.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long *falcat*ion or forcpitied tail behind. Brown.

FALCON, n. s. [ensis falcat; in French fauchon.] A short crooked sword; a cymeter.

I've seen the day, with my good hitting fauchon,
I would have made them skip; I am old now. Shakespeare.

Old fauchons are new temper'd in the fire;
The sounding trumpet crys your souls inspire. Dryden, J. C.

What sign and tears
Hath Eugene caus'd! how many widows curse
His cleaving fauchon! Philips.

FALCON, n. s. [faulcon, French; falconne, Italian; falco, Latin. Credo, a rostro falcato vivo aduaco, from the falconet or crooked bill.]

1. A hawk trained for sport.
As Venus's bird, the white, swift, lovely dove,
O! happy dove that art compar'd to her,
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the grip of falcon fierce not fast. Sidney.

Air stops not the high soaring of my noble faulcon. Watson.

Apulian fawns, for the rich soil admir'd,
And thy large fields where falcans may be tir'd.

Dryden, Juv.
Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?

2. A sort of cannon, whose diameter at the bore is five inches and a quarter, weight seven hundred and fifty pounds, length seven foot, load two pounds and a quarter, shot two inches and a half diameter, and two pounds and a half weight. Harris.

FA'LCONEER, n. s. [faulconier, French.] One who breeds and trains hawks; one who follows the sport of fowling with hawks.

Hist! Romeo, hist! O for a faulconer's voice,
To lure this tassel gentle back again. Shakespeare.

The universal remedy was swallowing of pebbles, in imitation of falconers curing hawks.

I have learnt of a falconer never to feed up a hawk, when I would have him fly.

Dryden, Don Sebast.
A faulconer's Henry is, when Emma barks
With her of tawdls and of lures he talks. Prior.

FA'LCONET, n. s. [faulconette, French.] A sort of ordnance, whose diameter at the bore is four inches and a quarter, weight four hundred pounds, length six foot, load one pound and a quarter, shot something more than two inches diameter, and one pound and a quarter weight. Harris.

Mahomet sent janizaries and nimble footmen, with certain faulcons and other small pieces, to take the straghts. Knodles.

FA'LCONRY, f. n. s. [faulconnerie, Fr.] The art of breeding and training hawks.

In vain you expect much information "de re accipitraria," of falconry, hawks or hawking, from very ancient Greek or Latin authors; that art being either unknown, or so little advanced among them.

Sir T. Brown, Miscel. p. 111.

FALDAGE, n. s. [faldagium, barbarous Latin.] A privilege which anciently several lords reserved to themselves of setting up folds for sheep, in any fields within their manors, the better to mature them; and this not only with their own, but their tenants sheep. This faldage in some places they call a fold-course, or freefold. Harris.

FA'LDREE, n. s. [fald and ree.] A composition paid anciently by tenants for the privilege of faldage. Dici.

FA'LDING, n. s. [fauld, Sax. a kind of coarse cloth, Skinner; a sort of fald or wrapper, as we may suppose, like the Irish mantle, faldin, which Giraldus Cambrensis describes in low Latin by "phaltingis laneis." Faldones in low Latin also signify coarse garments. V. Du Cange in voce.] A kind of coarse cloth.

All in a gounce of folding to the knee.

Chaucer's Shipman, ProL C. T.

FALDSTOOL. n. s. [old Fr. faldstool; low Lat. faldistrium; from the Sax. falb] A kind of stool placed at the south side of the altar, at which the kings of England knelt at their coronation; the chair of a bishop, enclosed within the rails of the altar; an arm-chair; a folding chair.

At the right side of the east window, on the wall, are fixed plates of brass, wherein is engraven the figure of a judge in his robes, kneeling at a faldstool, with three sons behind him.

Adams's Desk. C. 10.

To FALL. v. n. pret. I fell, compound pret. I have fallen, or fallen. [feallan, Saxon; fallen, German.]

1. To drop from a higher place.

Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence. Deut.

I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening.
And no man see me more. Shak. Hen. VIII.

2. To drop from an erect to a prone posture.

Isaiah fell all along on the earth.

1 Sam. xxviii. 30.

That is a step
On which I must fall, or else o'erleap;
For in my way it lies. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To drop; to be held or adhere no longer.

His chains fell off from his hands. Acts, xii. 7.

4. To move down any descent.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts being in motion, have no connexion one with another, but glide and fall off any way, as gravity and the air presseth them. Burnet.

5. To drop ripe from the tree.

As the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. Is. xxiv. 4.

6. To pass at the outlet; as a river.

Cæsar therefore gave orders to build his galleys on the Loir, and the rivers that fell into it.

Arbuthnot on Cæsar.

7. To be determined to some particular direction.

Birds and fowls that rest one foot to ease the other, naturally lay their heads under their wings, that the centre of gravity may fall upon the foot they stand on. Cygnus.

8. To apostatize; to depart from faith or goodness.

Labour to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. Heb. iv. 11.

They brought scandal
To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt
In feeble hearts, propence enough before
To waver or fall off, and join with idols.

Milton, S. A.

Whether some spirit on holy purpose fell,
Or some fall'n angel from below broke loose,
Who comes with envious eyes, and curst intent,
To view this world and its created Lord. Dryden.

9. To die by violence.

God and good angels fight on Richmond's side,
And Richard fell in being of all his pride.

Shakespeare, Ric. III.

If one should be a prey, how much the better
To fall before the lion than the wolf! Shakespeare.

What other oath.

Tham honesty to honesty was giv'd;
That this shall be, or we will fall for it.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee. Psalms, xxi. 7.

Ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. Lev. xxvii. 7.

They not obeying,

Incur'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifest in sin, doer'd to fall. MIL. P. L.

Almon falls, old Tyrrhus' eldest care,
Pierc'd with an arrow from the distant war.

Dryden, Æn.

10. To come to a sudden end.

The greatness of these Irish lords suddenly fell and vanished, when their oppressions and extortions were taken away. Dorset.

He first the fate of Cæsar did foretell,
And pity'd Rome when Rome in Cæsar fell;
In iron clouds conceal'd the publick light;
And impious mortals fear'd eternal night.

Dryden, Virg.

11. To be degraded from an high station; to sink into meanness or disgrace; to be plunged into sudden misery.

What can be their business

With a poor weak woman fall'n from favour! Shakespeare.

12. To decline from power or empire; to be overthrown.

What men could do,

Is done already: heaven and earth will witness,
If Rome must fall, that we are innocent. Act. Cato.

13. To enter into any state worse than the former.

He fell at difference with Ludovico Sforza, who carried the keys which brought him in, and shut him out. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Some painters taking precepts in too literal a sense, have fallen thereby into great inconveniences. Dryden.

14. To come into any state of weakness, terror, or misery.

Those, by observing the beginning of a change for the entire work of new life, will fall under the former guilt. Hammond.

One would wonder how so many learned men could fall into so great an absurdity, as to believe this river could preserve itself unmixt with the lake.

Addison on the Sever.

The best men fall under the severest pressures. Waker.

15. To decrease; to be diminished, as in weight.

From the pound weight, as Pliny tells us, the As fell to two ounces in the first Punic war; when Hannibal invaded Italy, to one ounce; then, by the Papirian law, to half an ounce. Arbuthnot on Cæsar.

16. To decrease; to shrink; to fall away.

A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

When the price of corn falleth, then generally break no more ground than will supply their own turn. Carver.

But now her price is fall'n. Shak. C. Lear.

Brents will fall, and incomes every day loose, till industry and frugality, joined to a well ordered trade, shall restore to the kingdom the riches it had formerly. Locher.

19. To sink; not to amount to the full.

The greatness of an estate, in bulk and territory, doth fall under measure; and the greatness of finances and revenue doth fall under computation. Bacon.

20. To be rejected; to become null.

This book must stand or fall with thee; not by any opinion I have of it, but thy own. Locke.

21. To decline from violence to calmness, from intemperance to remission.

He was stir'd,

And something spoke in choler, ill and hasty;
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest shew'd a most noble patient. Shaks.

At length her fury fell, her fuming ceas'd;
And ebbing in her soul, the god deceas'd. Dryden, Æn.

22. To enter into any new state of the body or mind.

In sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart,
Full asleep, or hearing die. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Solyman, chafed with the loss of his galleys and best soldiers, and with the double injury done unto him by the Venetians, fell into such a rage that he curs'd Barbarossa. Knelles.

When about twenty, upon the falsehood of a lover, she fell distracted. Temple.

A spark like thee, of the man-killing trade,
Fell sick, and thus to his physician said:
My friends, I am not sick, 't is my part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart;

My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy furr upon my tongue.

Dryden, Pers.

And have you known none in health, who have pined you; and behold, they are gone before you, even since you fell into this distemper?

Wake, Prep. for Death.

He died calmly, and with all the easiness of a man, falling asleep. Astbury.

Fortius himself off falls in tears before us. As he mourns'd his rival's ill success. Act. Cato.

For as his own bright image he survey'd,
He fell in love with the fantastic shade. Act. Ovid.

I fell in love with the character of Pomponius Atticus; I longed to imitate him. Mount to Pope.

23. To sink into an air of discontent or dejection of the look.

If thou persuade thyself that they shall not be taken, let thy countenance fall. Judah, vi. 9.

If you leave any other part to make, hide it not; for ye shall find we will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon, New Atlantis.

I have observ'd of late thy looks are fallen,
O'ercast with gloomy cares and discontent.

Addison, Cato.

24. To sink below something in comparison.

Fame of thy beauty and thy youth,
Among the rest me hither brought;
Finding this fame fall short of truth,
Made me stay longer than I thought. Waller.

25. To happen; to befall.

For such things as do fall scarce once in many ages, it doth suffice to take such order as was requisite when they fell. Hooker.

Oh it falls out, that while one thinks too much of this doing, he leaves to do the effect of this thinking. Sedney.

A long advertent and deliberate conning of consequents, which falls not in the common road of ordinary men. Hale.

Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content and seek no new. Sb. Merch. of Ven.

If the worst fall that ever fell, I hope I shall make shift to go without him. Sb. Merch. of Ven.

O, how feeble is man's power,
That if good fortune fall,
Cannot add another hour,
Nor a minute hour recall!

Doune.

Since both cannot possess what both pursue,
I'm griev'd, my friend, the chance should fall on you. Dryden.

I had more leisure, and disposition, than have since fell to my share. Swift.

26. To come by chance; to light on.

I have two fellows that will Seek Percy and thyself about the field;
But seeing thou fall'st at me so luckily,
I will assay thee. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The Romans fell upon this model by chance,
but the Spartans by thought and design. Swift.

27. To come in a started method.

The old hours at the end of the solar year, are not indeed fully six, but are deficient 10' 44"; which deficiency, in 134 years, collected, amounts to a whole day; and hence may be seen the reason why the vernal equinox, at the time of the Nicene council, fell upon the 21st of March, fell now about ten days sooner. Haller on Time.

It does not fall within my subject to lay down the rules of odds. Felton on the Classics.

28. To come unexpectedly.

I am fallen upon the mention of incursions. Boyle.

tion fall away. St. Luke, viii. 13.

Say not thou, it is through the Lord that I fall away; for thou oughtest not to do the things that he hateth. Ecclesi. ix. 11.

42. To FALL away. To perish; to be lost.

Still propagate; or still thy fall away;
'Tis prudence to prevent the entire decay. Dryden, Virgil.

How can it enter into the thoughts of man, that the soul, which is capable of such immense perfection, and of receiving new improvement to all eternity, shall fall away into nothing, almost as soon as it is created? Addison, Spect.

43. To FALL away. To decline gradually; to fade; to languish.

In a curious brede of needlework one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other. Addison.

then fall off and forsake him. Hayward.

57. To FALL on. To begin eagerly to do any thing.

Some coarse cold salad is before thee set;
Broad with the brain perhaps, and broken sweet;
Fall on, and try thy appetite to eat. Dryd. Pers.

58. To FALL on. To make an assault; to begin the attack.

They fell on, I made good my place; at length
they came to the brow-staff with me; I defied
'em still. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Fall on, fall on, and help him out.
But spare his person for his father's sake. Dryden, Scen. Frier.

Draw all; and when I give the word, fall on. Edwards.

He pretends amongst the rest, to quarrel with me, to have fallen foul on primrose.

Dryden, Fob. Pref.

59. To FALL over. To revolt; to desert from one side to the other.

Aod dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! dost it, for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those reverent limbs.

60. To FALL out. To quarrel; to jar; to grow contentious.

Little needed those proofs to one who would have fallen out with herself, rather than make any conjectures to Zelnane's speeches.

Sidney.

How fall you out, say that?

—No contraries hold more conspiciously.

Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Meeting her of late behind the wood,
Seeking sweet favours for this hateful foul,

I did upbraid her, and fall out with her.

Shaks.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the locustians, who had elected him to be their king.

Hovell.

A soul exasperated in ill, falls out with every thing, its friend, itself.

Arbutnot, John Hall.

61. To FALL out. To happen; to befall.

Who think you is my Dorus fallen out to be?

Sidney.

Now, for the most part, it so falleth out, touching things which generally are received, that although in themselves they be most certain, yet because men presume them granted all, we are hardiest able to bring proof of their certainty.

Hobbes.

It so fell out, that certain players

We o'er-rode on the way; of those we told him.

Shakespeare.

So it may fall out, because their cool

Is late, not help to win.

Milton, S. A.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice.

I. Estrange.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened.

Tillotson.

62. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat.

The men were fashion'd in a larger mould,
The women fit for labour, big and bold;

Gigantick limbs, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;

Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryden, Juv.

63. To FALL to. To apply himself to.

They would needs fall to practice of those virtues which they before learn'd.

Hodder on Time.

69. To FALL upon. To rush against.

At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another.

Addison.

70. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.

1. To DROP; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think an me,

Aod fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

If that the earth could trem with women's tears,

Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile.

Shakespeare, Otello.

Draw together;

And when I rear my hand, do you the like,

To fall it on Ganaxlo.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it.

Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without half, as far as he will, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lose your trade, or else prevent not the high rate.

Locke.

4. To yearn; to bring forth.

They, then conceiving, did in yeating time fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's.

Shakespeare.

- FALL n. s. [from the verb.]

High ar'd their heads a mouldering rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and never and over he comes, and on again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son, coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died.

2 Esdr. x. 48.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a nap, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth out again, as oil does.

Bacon, Physical Remains.

A fever or fall may take away any reason. Locke.

Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Wail his fall,

Whom I myself have slain. Shaks. Macbeth.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies.

Judith, viii. 9.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us dwell in the land.

2 Esdr. viii. 17.

5. Ruin; dissolution.

Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose sight

Has heav'd resarch'd and som'd above thy bright;

Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,

Or seal more fierce than thy, thy fall consume.

Dryden.

6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or calamities, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accusor of his change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall.

Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and dost conceive

Of my restraint; why here I live in ease;

And pities this my miserable fall. Dan. C. Wars.

He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate,

Perhaps forgets that Oxford er was great;

Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,

Beholds these glorious only to thy fall.

Pope to Parrel.

Hobbes.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands to purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London.

Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.

That strain again it had a dying fall:

O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South

That breathes upon a bank of violets,

Stealing and giving odour. Shakespeare, T. Night.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings

Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night.

At every fall smoothing the raven down

Of darkness till it would! Milton, Comus.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise.

Deoon, Nat. Hist.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls

Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, those things made men to swoon for fear.

Wisdom, xvii, 18.

Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murm'ring falls.

Dryden, Verg.

The swain, in barren doverts, with surprise
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise
And starts, amidst the thrifty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur in his ear.

Pope, Metast.

Now, under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost!

Pope, St. Cecilia.

Laturinus, varicous, false, deceitful.

Sudden, malicious, smacking of 'er'y sin
That has a name. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.
Shakespeare.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, to making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, on ways put in fear, turn false unto him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

So hast thou cheated Theodos with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free.

Dryden.
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, far being false to love, in forsaking Dido.

Dryden, Virgil.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves; the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden, Zén.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE, adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

That thou would'st highly;
That thou would'st holly: would it not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win? Shakspeare, Macb.

To FALSE*† v. a. [false, old Fr. falsare, Ital. and Lat.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hast thy faith with perjury?

Spenser, F. Q.

'Tis gold
Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes Diana's rangers false themselves. Shakspeare, Cym.

2. To deceive.

Fair scenery pleases each in other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;

To be the falsest fancy he her takes
To be the falsest wight that lived yet. Spenser, F. Q.

With a falsest wry jest. Watson, Sonn. 32.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await

Avantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes astwart, sometimes he strook him straight.

And falsed off his blows, 'till luda him with such bait. Spenser, F. Q.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEFACED,* adj. [false and face.] Hypocritical; deceitful.

When drums and trumpet shall
I the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of falsefaced soothing! Shakspeare, Coriol.

FALSEHEART,* adj. [false and heart.]

PERFIDIOUS. See FALSEHEARTED.

I am thy king, and thou a falseheart traitor.
Shakespeare, H. VI. p. 11.

FALSEHEARTED*† adj. [false and heart.]

Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutral and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, be noted.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Our faithless nephew, that falsehearted peer.
Mir. for Mag. p. 576.

A factious or falsehearted army.

FALSEHEARTEDNESS,* n. s. [from falsehearted.]

PERFIDIOUSNESS; deceitfulness.

There was no hypocrisy or falseheartedness, no artifice or design in all this. Stillingfl. Works, i. 521.

FALSEHOOD, n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud: he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show.

Milton, P. L.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heavenly form, pretended
To be his, belied, mislead, mislead thee. Milton, P. L.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remain falsehood.
Job, xli. 34.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton, P. L.

FALSELY*† adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Sinceon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing piety and religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mightily every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;

Falsely; for he had been truly lov'd, at least,
He would have giv'n me day to my request.

Dryden, Augustus.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraid'd for being find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to soothe their secret resentments.

Addison, Spect.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient when we falsely think convenient for us. Shakspeare, Tem.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

Nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
The plain way of his merit. Shakspeare, Cor.

FALSHENESS,* n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

Falsheness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st Modest as justice. Shakspeare, Pericles.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud, rapine, and perjury and falsehood to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature?

Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Pity is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falshness or foulness of intentions, especially to perjured devotion. Hem. on Fund.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect gun, that great Northumberland, then false to him, would of that sword give to a greater falshness.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falshness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant.

FALSER,* n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would warn'd be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;

And such end, perdie, does all them remain,
That of such falsers' friendship been false to him.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

FALSETTO,* [Ital.] A musical term; a feigned voice.

The mock heroic falsetto of stupid tragedy.
Burke on a Regicide Pencer.

FALSIIFIABLE*† adj. [false and falsifiable.]

LIABLE to be counterfeited or corrupted.

Colgrave.

FALSIIFICATION,* n. s. [falsification, Fr. from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, willingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this tale, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification.

Rome.

FA'LIFICATOR. * n. s. [Lat. falsificator.] A falsifier.

He discovered a malign itch to have made me a falsificator like himself.

By. Morley, Duchess, &c. p. 175.

FA'LIFIER. † n. s. [from falsify, &c.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not. Huot.
That punishment which is appointed for the forgers and falsifiers of the king's coin.

Achem, Tuppil. B. 1.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proof.

Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Heaters are naturally falsifiers, and the people of all others, that put their shame the worst together.

L'Entrance.

To FA'LIFY. † v. a. [falsify, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine species, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoundeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.

Hooker.

As Scripture will to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.

Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balances by deceit. Anon, viii. 5.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Add.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsify'd, and his bed defiled. Sidney.
He suddenly falsify'd his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.

Knollys, Hist.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trusts.

Decoy of Devils.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield In falsify'd, and round with jav'lin's Hill'd.

Dryden, Amind.

Of this word Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there; why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si Græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make my meaning plain:

Ma si l'Usbergo d'Ambra era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Culmar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins.

Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

Johnson.

The word certainly deserves not to be received in this sense; but it appears to have been a phrase of the fencing-school for thrust, from a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher, which Dryden probably had once noticed, (for he had the highest opinion of the language of these dramatists), but had forgotten. Dr. Johnson says, that he had once seen the word copied; but he was not aware that Dryden himself was a copier.

How can he stand

Upon his guard who hath sisters in his head,
To which his feet must ever be a dancing?
Beside a falsify may spoil his cringe,
Or making of a leg, in which consists
Much of his court-perfection.

Brown, and Fl. Coronation.

To FA'LIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LISITY. † n. s. [falsitè, old French; falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those crouns, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever live is owing unto God's truth.

Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sidney.
Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding.

South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

By felaines and lies the greatest part Of mankind they corrupted.

Milton, P. L.

That Dammbus ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.

Glaucio, Scipio.

To FA'LTER. v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish, vaultur, a stammerer, Ice-landick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Spenser, F. Q.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the fal'ring tongue. Dryd.

He changes, gods! I falter at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall fall under foul rebellious arms.

He found his legs falter. Wilmotes, Rich. II.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far ideas are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover.

Locke.

To FA'LTER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.
This word seems to be merely rustic or provincial.

Barley for malt must be sold, dry sweet, and clean falter'd from foulness, seeds and husks.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FA'LTERING. * n. s. [from falter.] Feebleness; deficiency.

The deliquium and faltering of our spirits, the violence and torment of bodily pains.

Killingbeck's Sermon. p. 228.

FA'LTERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. † v. a. [Goth. fimbil, stuttering; Danish, fambler.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner, Dr. Johnson says; but it is in Sherwood's old dictionary, viz. "to fumble with the mouth, beguery," i. e. to speak imperfectly; as also with its descendants, "a fumbling," and "a fambling."

Cotgrave also renders beguery, "to fumble, to muffle in the mouth, to speak as a child that but begins to speak." And this strengthens my opinion, that our northern word faffle is a corruption of the present. See To FAFFLE.

FAME. † n. s. [fame, old French; fama, Latin; φάμα, Dorick.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries.

1 Chron. xlii. 5.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless.

Addison, Spect.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,
The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt.

Job. i. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames.

Bacon.

To FAM. * v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To make fames.

Your second birth.

Will fame old Lethe's flood.

R. Jonson, Masque of Christmas.

Pr'ythee who fames thee?

Brown, and Fl. King and no King.

2. To report.

That Richard—should fane King Edward the fourth's bastard. Sir G. Buck, Hist. R. III. p. 82.

FA'MED. part. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.
He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos his more fam'd shades,
Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road.

Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity.

Addison.

FA'MELESS.† adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown.

May be die fameless and forgot.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running fountains.

Mary, Virgil.

FAMILIAR.† adj. [from familiar, Latin.]
1. Domestic; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome.

Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell.

Shakespeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalaad straight thought he saw his niece Par-thenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken.

Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened.

Hooker.

Let us choose such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once may be,
As things acquainted and familiar to us.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left,
Familiar to our eyes.

Milton, P. L.

One idea which is familiar to the mind,
connected with others which are new and strange,
will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance.

Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed;
habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd,
In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain.

Mil. P. L.

The senses at first let in particular ideas, and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and comes got to them.

Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and grovelling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and devolution.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Patience permit the sadly-planning strain;
Familiar now with grief, your tears restrain.

Pope, Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood; there is nothing more familiar than this.

Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He utters
His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains.

Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

VOL. II.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation.

Comden.

9. Often applied, in the Bible, to spirits; supposed by some to alude to those who imposed on mankind by pretending to have a spirit or demon speaking from within their bodies.

Thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar
spirit.

Isaiah, xlii. 4.

FAMILIAR. n. s.
1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman and my familiar.

Shakespeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected
by his familiar, this affects him.

Rogers.

2. A person supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love.

Shakespeare.

FAMILIARITY. n. s. [from familiarité, French;
from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds.

Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits.

Pope.

To FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [from familiarizer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by ha-bitude; to make common.

Being familiarized to it, men are not shocked at it.

Baile, Analogy of Religion.

Wellamstedde, the learned and liberal abbot of St. Alban's, being desirous of familiarizing the history of his patron saint to the monks of his convent.

Warton, Hist. of E. P. ii. 53.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions.

Addison, Spect.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your awariness will jest upon my love.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Thyrard, and then he broke his head.

Shakespeare.

The Governor came to us, and after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sent him down.

Beaumont, New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the un-concernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lower mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon.

Raleigh, History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horse still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The trust notions in the easiest way.

Pope.

FA'MILISM. n. s. [from family.] The tenets of a deluded sect called the family of love, by their artful founder, H.

Nicholas, a Westphalian, who introduced his doctrine into England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and occasioned no small confusion, as the history of that reign shews.

We see too tainted with popery, — another with familiarity; and all these run a madding after their own fancies.

B. Hall, Rev. p. 5.

FA'MILIST. n. s. [from family.]

1. One of the sect called the family of love.

'Tough the familiarist, libertines, and anabaptists, stand in opposition to papists; yet the greater fowler of souls catcheth them all with the same foul birdlime of impure laws.

2. A master of a family.

If you will needs be a familiarist, and marry, must not the want of issue among your greatest afflictions.

Osborn, Advice to a Son, (1658), p. 70.

FAM'ILLE. en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chase for companions led to see;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit where'er you will.

Swift.

FA'MILY. n. s. [from familia, Latin; famille,
French.]

1. Those who live in the same house;
household.

The night made little impression on myself;
but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat.

Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershom was the family of the Levites.

Numb. iii. 21.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood
Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,
Go and complain thy family is young,
Near own thy fathers have been fools so long.

Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watery.

Newton, Nat. Hist.

FA'MINE. n. s. [from famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up.

Sh. Macb.

Famines have not been east of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God.

Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receive'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish thee? Shaks.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus that labours up the hill.
The rolling rock to vain; and curst Ixion's wheel.

Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air

Above the clouds will pierce his entrails gons,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread.

Milton, P. L.

D

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish. Shakespeare.

FA'MISHMENT.† n. s. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

So sore was the famishment in the land.

Gen. xlvii. 13. Matthew's Trava.

Laugh and be fat, with all you touch is gold,
Though that food your soul's famishment fills.

Dante, Vita's Pellegrinaggio, sign. V. 2. b.

Apicius, thus did't on his gut bestow
Full millions millions, yet when this was spent,

Ten millions still remained to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment, sold.

In poison'd poison drank't. Hobbes on Prov.

FAMOUS.† adj. [from famou.] Renowned; celebrity.

FA'MOUS.† adj. [fameux, French; famozus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Shakespeare, Hen. 7.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

Numb. xvi. 2.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.

Ezek. xlviii. 10.

Pierius was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and wine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Hypocritus.

Pocock on Oriens.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals.

Milton, S. A.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloigne, turned into English by Fairfax.

Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification; and imports fame, whether for good or ill.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them.

Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

3. Sometimes, notorious; like the Latin famosus, which has also the sense of infamous.

The death of slaves and famous malefactors.

Tillotson, Sermon on 1 John, vi. 9.

FA'MOUSNESS.† adj. Renowned; much talked of; famous.

The painful warrior famous for fight.

The wise is indeed the most generous grape of Persia, and famous all over the world.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 130.

FA'MOUSLY.† adv. [from famous.]

1. With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politic grave counsel; in the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of, and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read.

Greer, Cam. Sacra.

2. Notoriously.

He had never been praised by Gabriel Harvey for his labour, if therein he had not been so famously abused.

Nash, Apol. of Pierce Penileux. (1593.)

FA'MOUSNESS.† n. s. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

Shakespeare.

muler foe," for domestic foe, March. Tale. And the word famulist is in use at Queen's College, in Oxford, for an inferior member of it.

FA'MULIST. * See TO FAMULATE.

FAN.† n. s. [pann, Saxon; varnus, Lat.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scars, and fans, and double change of linens.

With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knavery.

Shakespeare.

"Tis a sweet talk; and if the wind be stirring,
Serves like a fan to cool. Bruno. & Pl. An. of Med.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ;

In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;

But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,

Directs his wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;

Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame.

Gay.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before.

Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to show him such a fan of feathers.

L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed.

[fan, French.]

Fan, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong.

Tasso.

Ases shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

Isaiah, xxi. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing it all, winnows the light away.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wickertan, or a fan with sails.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner, with a spring, from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.

Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature works in us all a love to our own counsell: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love.

Hobbes.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves.

Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The Norwegian banners float the sky,
And fan our people cold.

Shaks. Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solace'd the woods, and spread their painted wings, Till even.

Milton, P. L.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blow;
To move the fanning wind the loom rose:
The fanning wind and purring streams continue her repose.

Dryden, Camion and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves.

Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Puffs on my neck; and fann'd her parting hair.

Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any.

Bacon, Aphorisms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd, the wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand in judgement.

FANATICAL. * adj. [fani fanaticus.]

Enthusiastic; mad; mad.

I cannot but earnestly desire, and pray for, an effectual reformation of manners and propagation of the Gospel by all sober and christian methods;

but may venture to foretell, without pretending to the spirit of prophecy, that this great work will never be accomplished by an enthusiastic and fanatical head.

Bp. Lexington, Ecthu. of Metho. and Popish compared, Pref.

FANATICALITY. * adv. [from fanatical.]

In a wild enthusiastic way.

The liberty they pursued was a liberty from order, from virtue, from morals, and from religion; and was neither hypocritically nor fanatically followed.

Burke.

FANATICALNESS. * n. s. [from fanatical.]

Religious frenzy.

That temper of profaneness, whereby a man is disposed to contemn and despise all religion, how slightly soever men may think of it, is much worse than infidelity, than fanaticism, than idolatry;

and of the two 'tis much more eligible for a man to be an honest heathen and a devout idolator, than a profane Christian.

Wilk. on Nat. Rel. li. l.

FANATICISM. n. s. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the four last ages of the Scriptural polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies.

Rogers.

FANATICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Chairs, Ius, Orus, and their train,
With mount'rous shapes and sorceries alius'd

Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek.

Their wand'ring gods dings'd in brutish forms.

Milton, P. L.

FAN.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatch'd up by a fanatic.

Deacy of Poetry.

FANCIFUL.† adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason; of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images; of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they?

Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it.

Gerrit, Pref. to Ovid.

FANCIFULLY.† adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

What conceived old man is this, said he, that talks thus fancifully?

Morre, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

FANCIFULNESS. n. s. [from fanciful.]
Addiction to the pleasures of imagination;
habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influence of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations.

Hale, Orig. of Manhood.

FANCY. n. s. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία, Greek. It should be phantasy.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,

If Jonson's learned sock be on,

Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,

Wear his native wood-notes wild. Milton, L'Al.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve

Reason as chief: among those, fancy next

Her office holds; of all external things,

Which the five watchful senses represent,

She forms imaginations, or airy shapes,

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames

All what we affirm, or what deny, and call

Our knowledge or opinion. Milton, P. L.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of taste, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason.

Astbury.

Love is by fancy led about,

From hope to fear, from joy to doubt;

Whom we now a goddess call,

Divinely grac'd in every feature,

Strall's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;

Love and hate are fancy's all. Grumville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hobbes.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Ad. on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorrier fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died.

With them they think on? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.

L'Etrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up

To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.

A resemblance of humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection.

Culter.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where's fancy led,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
Is it engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing feed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True words shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river.

Arabist.

One that was just setting upon a long journey, took up a fancy of pulling a trick upon Mercury.

L'Etrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatic, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not.

Racem, Not. Hist.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders.

Hemmer.

To FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

The heart fanciest as a woman's heart is true. Eccles. xxiv. f.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies.

Sprat, Sermon.

If our search has reached no farther than similes and metaphors, we neither fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd passions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dyes,
He whom fancy, but can ne'er express.

Dryden, Jun.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her for his husband. Rat. Hist.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. Swift.

FANCYFRAMED. adj. [fancy and framed.] Created by fancy.

He his own fancyframed foe defines;
In rage, "My arms, give me my arms," he cries! Crashaw, Poems, p. 53.

FANCYFREE. adj. [fancy and free.] Free from the power of love. See the sixth sense of FANCY.

The imperial votaries passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancyfree. Sh. Midw. N. Dr.

FANCYMONSTER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with cunning. Rosalind on her bark; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonster, I would give him some good content; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shaks. As you like it.

FANCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

All fancysick she is, and pale of cheer.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Etrange.

FAND FOR FOUND. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by trial he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FANDA'NGO. n. s. [Spanish.] A kind of very lively dance which the Spaniards have learned from the Indians. V. Cormon, Diet. Sobrin. Aumentado, Antwerp, 1769. Labat, the French missionary, says it was brought from Guinea by the negroes into the West Indies, and thence into Spain.

Our evening ended with a ball, where we had for the first time the pleasure of seeing the fandango danced. It is odd and entertaining enough, when they execute with precision and agility all the various footings, wheelings of the arms, and cracklings of the fingers; but it exceeds in wantonness all the dances I ever beheld.

Southey, Trav. through Spain. L. 6.

FANE. n. s. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Not fane, nor capitol,

The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,

Embracements all of fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Old Calisto, who kept the sacred fane

Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden, Æn.

Yet some to furies repair'd, and bumble riles

Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods.

Who with their vot'ries in one ruin sherd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,

Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb.

Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious

From men their cities, and from gods their fens.

Pope.

FANFARE. n. s. [French.] A sounding of trumpets, or a coming into the lists with sound of trumpets; hence also any public bravado, or flourish; any loud-resounding brag, or ostentation. Cotgrave. See FANFAROS, which Menage traces to an Arabic expression.

Fanfare [is] a sort of military air or flourish commonly short and lively, which is performed by trumpets, and imitated by other instruments.

Appendix to Mus. Diet. (1769), p. 30.

FANFARON. n. s. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabic it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Menage.]

1. A bully; a Hector.

Virgil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtue, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or brector.

Dryden on Drom. Poem.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in fests of arms; and none so forward to engage in figures or disputes as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Etrange.

FANFARONADE. n. s. [fanfaronade, Fr.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of Monsieur Bouffars. Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [Goth. fang, seizure, Serenius; Sax. fangen, seized, from pengan; Dutch, vangen; Germ. fangen, to seize.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch.

To vang is yet used in Devonshire. Destruction fang mankind! Shakespeare, Titus.

But whilst be this hot humour hugs,

Death fang's the remnant of his hugs.

Vernes cited in Clar. and Whit. comp. 1737. p. 54.

FANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
E'en till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or claws; as boars, picks, salmon, and dogs, though less.

Itacon, Nat. Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain The bulk; the bulk, upond's laid headlong on the plain. Dryden, Ovid.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stooping from your horse, Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Ad. Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yucca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Fiedlin, Kalkender.

F'ANG'ED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
Not Seyblans, nor fierce Deucalons, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half with vain retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field.

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Philip, Britain.

F'ANGLE.† n. s. [from engan, jen, or Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new;
as, new fangled, new fangledness. So far
Dr. Johnson, who cites no example.
But it is used, without the epithet new,
and in the sense of any trifle; and, as
Mr. Pegge has also observed, may be considered a cant or arbitrary word rather than deduced from the Sax. engan, or from a fanciful etymon assigned to neufangle. See NEWTANGLED.

There was no feather, o fangle, jen, nor jewel,
— left behind. Greene, Mamilla, (1583.)

A haired to fangle and the Fish's foederies of his time. A. Wood, Ath. Ox. ii. col. 456.

F'ANGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously shewy; vainly decorated; new fangled, is therefore new fashioned; dressed out
in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ascham.

A book I'oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, garment
Nobler than it covers. Shakespeare, Cym.

F'ANGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless;
without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangles lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

F'AN'OOT. n. s. A quantity of wares; as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters.

Dict.

F'AN'NEL.† n. s. [from fanon, Fr. See FANON.]
A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

Item, a suite of vestments of blue velvet,
or fringed with needle work, with albes, stoles,
and fanonets agreeable to the same.

Will of Sir T. Pope, Life, p. 338.

F'AN'NER.† n. s. [from fan.]

1. One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan
her. Jerem. li. 2.

2. A winnower of corn. Barrett.

F'AN'NING.† n. s. [from fan.] Ventilation.
Hulot.

He will be often very agreeably entertained with grateful sounds in the natural music of birds, the fanings of woods, the purling of streams, or the falls of water.

Convent, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

F'AN'ON.† n. s. [Fr. fanon; low Lat. fano;
Goth. fanaz; Lat. pannus.]

1. A sort of ornament, worn about the arm of a mass-priest; the fannel. See FAN'NEL.

Tunics, stoles, fanons, and mitres.

Bale on the Revd. P. li. sign. k. vj. b.

2. A banner; and in blazon, any large bracelet that hangs down in fashion of the maniple, or fanon aforesaid, from the arm. Colgrave.

F'AN'TASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare, K. John.

F'AN'TASM.† n. s. [fantasma, old Fr. phantasma, Lat. See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

F'AN'TASTICAL.† adj. [fantasticus,
FANTA'STICK.†] Fr. from fantasy.

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of. South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present fests

Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes us his horrible state of man, that function is smother'd in his morn; and nothing is.
But what is not. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastical ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally. Thus fantastical colours are the same as emphattical. See EMPHATICAL.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye shew? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Many of them [lying wonders] take the fantastical, deceiving the eye like the tricks of jugglers. Such were the rods and serpents of Pharaoh's enchanters, which were devoured of Aaron's rod;
because they were but shadows, and his a substance. Shuffelb. Learned Discourses, p. 307.

An aerial fantastical body. South, Serm. vi. 16.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Not happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastical wheel. Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians can laugh. Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silver strings,
With twenty odd concealed true love knots:

To be fantastical, may become a youth.
Of greater time than I. Shak. Two Gent. of Ver.
Dauntless is provided with an impetuous, expensive, and fantastical mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and af-

We are apt to think your realists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their clothes, without any regard to the moral of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALLY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That four attends her not. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically choose,
even or odd, he thinks not why. Greene, Comel. Secra.

FANTA'STICALNESS.† n. s. [from fantas-tastical.] tical.

1. Humourousness; mere compliance with fancy.

Vain Delights, thus feeder of my follies
With light fantasticalness, be thou in favour!

Bacon, and Fl. Four Plays in One.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not to assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantasticalness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

Nor is this corruption happened to the Greek language, as it used to happen to others, either by the law of the conqueror, or inundation of strangers; but it is inensibly crept in by their own supine negligence and fantasticalness.

Memo, Fac. Exercit.

FANTA'STICK.† n. s. A fantastick, concoited, or whimsical person.

A vain fantastick, that takes proud clothes to be part of himself. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 62.
New-fangled toys, and trimming shall
Which takes our late fantasticks with delight.

Memo, Fac. Exercit.

FANTA'STICKLY.† adv. [from fantastick.]

Irrationally; whimsically.

He is neither too fantastickly melancholy, or too rashly cholerick. Dr. Johnson, Cynth. Reverts.

F'ANTASY. n. s. [fantasia, Fr. phantasia,
Lat. phantasia, Gr.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fancy?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;

Which is as thin as substance, as the air,
And more uncouth and than the wind.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fancy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayer said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shaksp.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send us good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the airy sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies' ears to fantasy's impure.

Spenser, Hulb. Tule.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections.

Whigg.

To FA'NTASY.* n. s. [from the noun; old Fr. fantasier.] To like; to fancy.

Fantasing, or having a mind to, a thing.

Hulst.

The king, during his favour, fantasied so much his daughter, that almost all things began to grow out of frame.

Caendall, Life of Henry.

FA'NTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FA'NTOM-CORN.* n. s. Lank or light corn. A northern word. Grose, Brockett, &c.

Fantom-corn is corn that has little bulk or solidity in it, as a spirit or spectre.

Ray, N. C. Words, p. 25.

FAP, adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered.

Shakespeare.

FA'QUIR.* n. s. [Arab.] A kind of Mahometan religious; a sort of dervish; travelling about, and collecting alms. Written also fakir and fakier, and usually pronounced with the accent on the last syllable.

Such ill-tim'd gravity, such serious folly,
Might well befit the solitary student,
Th' unpractic'd dervise, or sequester'd fakir.

Johnson, French.

FAR.* adv. [Sax. feop, far; feoppe, farther; feoppe, farthest or farthest; and our comparative was formerly ferres, as our superlative was ferrest or farrest; "then walked I ferres," P. Plowman's Crede;—"a vice—farrest from humanity," Sir T. Elyot, Governor; Chaucer, "ferrest," Prolog. C. T. fairra, Goth. fara, lcel, to depart, to go away.]

1. To great extent in length.
Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows.

Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great

In what I love: the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer.

Prior.

With costly cares Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord;
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind.

Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Fætes came,
The far fam'd brother of th' enchantment dame.

Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be facious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this fox of mine as far
As who goes farther.

Shakespeare, *Jul. Cæs.*Is it far you ride?

As far, my lord, as will up to the time
"Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who sought his destiny.

Dryden, Æn.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide;
all states framing themselves therunto. Hobbes.
And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.

Spenser, Hulb. Tule.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon, Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army.

Keddes.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.
God hath bid dwell for all anxious care,
And not molest us, unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts, and notions vain.

Milton, P. L.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near,
since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by publick voice.

Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Forth of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryd. Virg.
But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!

Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden, Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch.

Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.
Till on the Po his blessed corps was bury'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison, Orind.

5. To a distance.

As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Ps. cxli. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor.

Ralph.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and resum'd his tents far off.

Milton, P. L.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

Burnet, Theory.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poind javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.

Addison, Orind.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jesus the day was far spent.

Judg. xii. 11.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees.

It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far, better through the water than air.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

These countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.

Waller.

Of negatives we have for the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most conditious of the moderns.

Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely for above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest.

Pope.

Al! hope not yet to breathe by native air,
For other journey first demands thy care.

Pope, Odyssy.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

I do not think

So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

You speak him far.

— I don't extend him, sir.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

Hooker.

Answer them
How far forth you do like their articles.

Shakespeare, Men. IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engages so far in some other sort, as to resolve.

Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how it is from being so much as any part of repentance.

Hemmond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it.

Tillotson.

The custom of these languages sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. Far off. At a great distance.

For though I feel him angry, yet will'd
To life prolong'd, and premis'd race, I now
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore.

11. Far off. To a great distance.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life.

Milton, *P. L.*12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition; as, I set the boat far off, I set the boat far from me.

13. Far is used often in composition: as, far-shooting, far-seeing.

FAR-SHOOTING.* n. s. A going out of the way; a departure from the subject.

What need these far-shoots? They go the shortest cut, who give him (the pope) a temporal power over all the kingdoms of the world!

Keller, Holy War, p. 280.FAR-FETCHED.* n. s. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politic far-fetches;
And from their Coptic priest, Kitcherus, Found out this mystic way to jere as.

Hudibr.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought the eastern star arise:
We trave the far-fetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brids our fathers made our prize.

Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

Far far-fetched rhymes make puzzled angles strain.

And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith
Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts, Logic.

FAR-FET. adj. [far and fet, our old word for fetched. Dr. Johnson, in two instances, converted this word into far-fetched, without authority.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Your far-fet vials please no man.

Ben Jonson, and Fl. Hen. Men's Favourite.

The far-fet spoil.

2. With all his far-fet policy.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Metaphors, far-fet, he'll be understood.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

FAR-FIERING. adj. [far and piece.]

Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her sire, to whose far-fiering eye

The wonders of the deep expanded lie;

Th' eternal councils which on earth he rears,

End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres.

Pope, Olympian.

FARSHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Oshooting to a great distance.

Then loud he said, Eneas drive by name;

The loud repeated voice to glad Eneas came;

Great Jove, he said, and the far-shooting god,

Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.

Dryden, Æneid.

FAR,† adj.

1. Distant; remote.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friend's affection either caused or prevailed.

Sidney, Arcadia.

A man taking a far journey. St. Mark, xlii. 34.

But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,

Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;

And some to far Oaxia shall be sold,

To try the Lybian bear, or Scythian cold.

Dryden, Virg.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,

Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shaks.

If we may venture in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.

Baile, Hist. of the World.

I hear the far-off curfew sound. Milt. II. Pens.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns when he knows he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses

The far side from the near. Dryden, Cymon.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as,

The nations far and near contend in choice.

Dryden.

FAR, n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,

Are for to be made of and counted fall dear;

For now is the loss of the far of the sow

More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.

Tusser.

FAR'AND.* See FARRAND.

TO FARCE.† v. a. [farcio, Latin, farcer, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients. This was formerly a common word in cookery, and is now converted into forced. So farceure was used for stuffing. See Pegge's Forme of Curry.

His supper was farced full of knives,

And pinnes, for to given fayre wives.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

I should pass the limits of a large book, farced with only testimonies to that end.

Anderson, Epist. on Benedict, (1579.) fol. 53.

What Broken piece of matter so e'er she's about, the name,

Palamon lards it, that the forces every business.

Ben Jonson, and Fl. Two Nob. Acts.

Some used to emblein the belly cleansed with wine, farced with cassia, myrrh, and other spices.

Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 508.

Rip. Sanderum.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The enturbanted robe of gold and pearl,

The forced title running for the slings.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

FARCE,† n. s. [Fr. farce, "a fond and dissolute play, comedy, or interlude; also the jig at the end of an interlude, wherein some prettie knaverie is acted; also a pudding, &c. any stuffing in meats." Cotgrave. Some think the theatrical word derived from the culinary one; yet farce, to laugh, to ridicule, is very old in the French language, from the Celtic farce, mockery.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture; the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind; grotesque painting is the same of the face of this. Dryden, Deformity.

What should be great you turn to farce, because they object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce.

Gay.

FARCE'AL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farceal, because they are actually in nature.

Gay, Pref. to the What if ye Call it.

FARCE'ALLY.* adv. [from farceal.] In a manner suitable only to a farce.

It is not necessary, that in order to do this he should have recourse to images that are farceally low.

Langens.

FARCE'ING.* n. s. [from farce.] The act of stuffing with mixed ingredients.

To make broth and farcing, and that full deinty.

Inter. of Jacob and Esau, (1568.)

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FAR'CY. n. s. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

TO FARD.* v. a. [French, farder.] To paint; to colour. Cotgrave, and Sherw.

He found that beauty, which he had left innocent, *fard*ed and sophisticated with some court-dress.

Wilson, Hist. of James I.

There of the *fard*ed top and even'd beard,

Fervious, with a Stoick's from discluse

Thy mainly loose. Shenstone, Economy, P. II.

FAR'DEL,† n. s. [farfello, Italian; far-del, old French, Rog. fardeau, modern.]

A bundle; a little pack.

Some sayeth to swim; some holding fast by the horses, others by spears and other like weapons, many upon farfello, and trustes, gat over the river.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 56. b.

Let us to the king be like in that in far-del will make him scratch his beard. Shaks. W. Tale.

To groan and sweat under a world's life?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO FAR'DEL,† v. a. [from the noun.] To make up in bundles.

Things, orderly *far-del*ed up under heads, are more portable.

Faller, Holy State, p. 164.

TO FARE,† v. n. [from far, Saxon; waren, Dutch; farer, Goth; far, a journey, Icel.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,

Until the blast'n' storm is overlown.

Spenker, F. Q.

His spirits pure were subject to our sight,

Like to a man in shew and shape he far'd.

Farfel.

So on he *fare*d, and to the border comes

Of Idem.

Sedly they far'd along the sea-bent shore,

Still bend'd their hearts.

Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids they well to fare thy nether friend.

Spenker, F. Q.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil as the best.

Eccles. iii. 26.

Well fare the hand, which to our humble sing

Presents that beauty.

Waller.

No in this through bright Sacharian far'd,

Oppos'd'd by those who strove to be our guard;

As ships, though never so obsequious, fall

Foul in a tempest on their admiral.

Waller.

No fare the stage among th' enrag'd bounds;

Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.

Decham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,

Toss'd by two adverse winds with rain,

Is bruist'd and beaten to and fro,

And knows not which to turn him to;

So far'd the knight between two foes,

And knew not which of them 't' oppose. Hudibras.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.

L'Estrange.

Thus fare the queen, and thus her fury blows

Amid th' crowd. Dryden, Æn.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which divers the private feuds, and animosities of the nation.

Addison, Freetholder.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours.

Seyt.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad. [Fr. faire.]

Thus it fareth when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight.

Hooker.

So fare it with wish truth falsehood contends.

Milton, P.

4. To happen to any one well or ill; with it preceding in an impersonal form

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeling the mouth, or guarding the head, till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fares sumptuously every day. St. Luke, xvi. 19.
Feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare, Timon.

Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Boswell, Fug. Err.

FAREWELL* n. s. [Sax. farew.]

1. Journey; passage. This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has not at all noticed. See the etymology of the verb. It straitway.

Himself unto his journey can prepare,
And all his armour ready dight that day,
That thought the morrow next mote stay his fare. Spenser, F. Q. v. c. 16.

2. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarsish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went into it to go with them unto Tarsish. Jonah, i. 3.

He passage begs with unregarded pray,
And wants two shillings to discharge his fare. Dryden, Juv.

3. The person carried; another sense unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. This is rather a colloquial expression.

The skills—pass each other with incredible ease and agility; so that the fare runs no risk of being overtaken. Drammaturg. Rev. (1744), p. 68.

4. Food prepared for the table; provisions. [Fr. faire.]

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play.
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton, P. L.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r,
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice:
He that would more is covetous, not wise;
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophic fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden, Juv.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatsoever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison, Guardian.

FAREWELL*† adv. This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; "sic felix, abi in bonam rem; or bene tibi;" but in time use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left. So the Sw. farewell, and the Dutch verwel. It may be observed that the accent is placed, both in the adverb and substantive, indifferently on either syllable, as the examples shew. Dr. Johnson places, in both, the accent on the last syllable. But it is well remarked by Mr. Nares that the accent on the first syllable of the substantive, and on the second of the adverb, ought to be the permanent distinction.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; with thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you;
Defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare.

An iron shroud shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, invoid! in shade of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden, Virg.

Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryden.

O queen, farewell! be still possess'd
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest!
Pope, Odyssey.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show.
Treading the path to soldier ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Walker.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence! I will not use many words
With you: fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FAREWELL* n. s.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If chance the radiant sun, with farewell well,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds

As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the public in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator.

FARINACEOUS* adj. [from farina, Latin.]
Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of numerous plants; as, oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, and millet. Abrissau on Aliments.

FAR* n. s. [prelapse, Sax. strange.]
Unusual, unexpected things. Strange sights. Cumberland Dialect. The word occurs in our old poetry, in this sense.

Mr. Brockett gives it, among our northern words, with the meaning of trifles.

FARM* n. s. [ferme, French; peom, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and *farm*s to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.
It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms to their tenants. Spenser.

To FARM* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. To take at a certain rate.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farm'd of the king. Cumden, Rem.

3. To cultivate land.

FA'RMABLE* adj. [from farm.] That may be farmed. Sherwood.

FA'RMER* n. s. [fermier, French; or from farm; Sax. peomper.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.

Thou hast been a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakespeare.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.

Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer.

3. One who rents any thing; as, farmer of the post-horse duties.

To side with the farmers against the improvement of the revenue. Ld. Halifax.

FA'RMOST* n. s. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farrest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden, En.

FA'RNES* n. s. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their *farm*s from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the utmost number of able hands to fight. Cervic, Surv. of Cornwall.

Thirty acres make a fartling-land; nine fartlings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Curien.

FARTHINGALE. * n. s. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vertu signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the truseness.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings, with ruffs, and cuffs, and fartlingales, and things. Shakespeare.

Tell me,

What compass will you wear your fartlingale? Swiss poem.

Arthur wore in hall

Round about, like a fartlingale. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the fartlingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She sends a meed of all ages, With a huge fartlingale to swell her fusian stuff, A new comode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swiff.

I fast and pray for their intelligence. Shaks. Cymb.

FAST, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Abstinence from food.

A thousand men have broke their fast to-day,
That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
Shakspeare.

Where will this end? Four times ten days I've pass'd,
Wand'ring this woody maze, and human food
Nor tasted, nor had appetite; that fast
To virus I impute not, or count part
Of what I suffer here. Milton, P. L.

Happily and innocently were the ages of our forefathers, who broke their fasts with herbs and roots;
and when they were permitted flesh, eat it only dressed with hunger and fire. Dr. Taylor.

Shaks' goes unkindly, and refus'd to eat
One glance to feed me so long a fast.
Dryden, Tyrann. Linc.

2. Religious mortification by abstinence; religious humiliation.

We humble ourselves before God this day, not merely by the outward solemnities of a fast, but by affliction our souls as well as bodies for our sins.
Albany.

Nor pray'st nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain;
Nor tears, for ages, taught to flow in vain. Pope.

FAST, adj. [Saxon fastr, firm; Icel. fastir, the same.]

1. Firm; immovable.

He by his strength setteth fast mountains.
Ps. lxx. 6.

fold it, seal it, and again return to bed; rest all day while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Firm in adherence.

Quick wit is in desire near-fangled; in purpose, unconstant; light to promise any thing, ready to forget every thing, both benefit and injury; and thereby neither fast to friend, nor near-fast to foe. Arden, Schoolmaster.

6. Speedy; quick; swift. [from fast, Welsh, quick.] It may be doubted whether this sense be not always adverbial.

This work goeth fast on, and prospereth,
Ere, v. 8.

Skill comes so slow, and life so fast doth fly,
We learn less to little, and forget to much. Deanes.
The prince grew fast to a gun, and in
of a sweet and excellent disposition; it would be a stain upon you if you should mislead, or suffer him to be misled. Bacon to Villiers.

7. Fast and loose. Uncertain; variable; inconstant; deceitful.

A rope of fair pearl, which now hiding, now hidden by the hair, did, as it were, play at fast and loose each with other, giving and receiving richness. Sidney.

If he perceived by his outward cheer,
That any would his love by talk bewray,
Sometimes he heard him, sometimes spake our ear,
And play'd fast and loose the live-long day. Fairfax.
The folly and wickedness of men, that think to play fast and loose with God Almighty! L'Estr.
If they cohered, yet by the next conflict with other atoms they might be separated again; and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, without ever coming into the huge condense bodies of planets. Hemsted.

FAST, adv.

1. Firmly; immovably.

Bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair. Shakspeare, A. John.
This love of their myself have often seen,

And fattens Italy with foreign wares.
Dryden, Jun.

TO FATTEN.† v. n. [from fat.] To grow fat; to be pampered; to grow fleshy.

All agree to spoil the public good,
And villain fatten with the brave man's labour.
Orontes.

Apollo check'd my pride, and bad me feed
My fat'ning flocks, nor dare beyond the well.
Dryden.

Yet then this little spot of our red wall fill'd,
A num'rous family with plenty fill'd,
The good old man and thrifty housewife spent
Their days in peace, and fatten'd with content;
Enjoy'd the drops of life, and liv'd to see
A long-descending hopeful progeny.
Dryden, Jun.

Tigers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honesty in courts we find.
Granville.

FAULT.† n.s. [old Fr. faller, Lacombe, 1460; faulte, Cotgrave; faute and faul, modern; the third person singular of the indicative of the verb fallor, it fails, faul, i. e. fallit. So the Span. fallar means to be deficient. The Teut. faule, and the Su. Goth. faat, also signify defect. Dr. Johnson thinks that the l in our word is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute; and that it is in conversation generally suppressed. This I conceive to be not the case; no person of tolerable education would expose himself to the charge of ignorance or affectation by leaving out the l in the pronunciation of faul.]

1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.

The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the faul of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hooker.

He finds no faul with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Sillius, feet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought, Contracts the danger of an actual faul; Then what must be expect that still proceeds To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryden.

If you like not my poem, the faul may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.

They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find faul. Dryden.

To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a faul, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensable duty. Atterbury.

Before his sacred name sins ev'ry faul, And each exalted stanza trembles with thought. Page.

Which of our thum-cap'd ancestors found faul, For want of sugar-tongs or spoons for salt? King. Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find faul with the times. Sully.

2. Defect; want; absence.

I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for faul of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Puzzle; difficulty; as, the enquirer is at a faul.

We are not only at a faul, in the hunters' term; but at a rest, as if we were playing at tennis. Sir H. Watson, Lett. Rem. p. 550.

4. Misfortune. Not now in use.

David. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Marins. The more my faul, To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die. Shakespeare, Pericles.

TO FAULT. v.n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.

Which moved him rather in eloquence than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulth. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

TO FAULT.† v.a. To charge with a fault; to accuse.

For that I will not faul thee, But for bumbledances exact thee. Old Song. Whom should I faul? Sp. Hall, Sat. i. 2. For which only [bodily uncleanness] had they dishonoured their wives, our Servants had neither *faul*ed their gloss nor their practice.

Sp. Hall, Cases of Cons. iv. 2. That which is to be *faul*ed in this particular is, when the grief is immoderate and unreasonable.

Sp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 8. God's house is abused by them which bring hither hawks and dogs, which is *faul*ed in our church-hously.

Stefford's Learned Discourses, (1655.) p. 84.

FA'ULTER.† n.s. [from faul.] An offender; one who commits a fault.

Then she, Behold the faulter here in sight; This hand committed that supposed offence. Polixenus.

With my sweet words I could the King persuade, And make him pause, and take therein a breath, Till I, with suit, the faulter's peace had made. Mir. for Mag. p. 499.

TO FA'ULTER.† See TO FALTER.

FA'ULTINDER.† n.s. [faul and find.] A censurer; an objector.

Other pleasant faulfinders, who will correct the verb before they understand the noun. Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

Be thou no sharp faulfinder, but an admonisher without upbraiding. Trancl. of Bullinger's Sermon. p. 241.

FA'ULTUL.† adj. [faul and faul.] Full of crime.

So fares it with this faulful lord of Rome. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

FA'ULTILY.† adv. [from faul.] Not rightly; improperly; defectively; erroneously.

The former impression was exhausted, and very *faul*ly printed. Atty. Crammer, Pref. to the Bible.

FA'ULTINESS.† n.s. [from faul.]

1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.

When her judgement was to be practised in knowing faulness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or not to be collected. Sidney.

2. Delinquency; actual offences.

The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the faulness of their people heretofore is laid open. Hooker.

3. Imperfection; defect; unfitness for use.

If these objections are just, what have I done but discovered the faulness of a commodity, which Mr. Warburton had put off upon them, and they were, though innocently, putting off upon the publick, for good wares?

Edwards, Can. of Criticism. Pref.

FA'ULTLESS. adj. [from faul.] Exempt from fault; perfect; completely excellent.

Where for our sins be faulless suffered pain, There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Fairfax.

Who durst thy faulless figure thus deduce? Dryden, J. n.

Whoever thinks a faulless piece to see, Thinks what ne'er was, or is, nor e'er shall be. Page.

FA'ULTLESSNESS.† n.s. [from faulless.] The state of being perfect.

FA'ULTY. adj. [*faul*ty, French, from faul.]

1. Guilty of a fault; blameable; criminal; not innocent.

The king doth speak as one which is guilty. 2 Sm. xiv. 13.

Can thus

The image of God in man, created once
So goodly and erect, though faulty since!
To such unashingly sufferings be detus'd?

2. Wrong; erroneous.

The form of policy by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways faulty; faulty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; faulty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; faulty also in urging some things by Scripture meetable as they lay elders.

3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.

By accident of a faulty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, so that he died presently.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

- FAUN.* n. s. [Lat. Faunus.] A sort of inferior heathen deity, pretended to inhabit the woods.

Fauns, or elvans, be of poets feigned to be gods of the wood.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Calendar.

Rough *Satyr*s danc'd, and Fauns with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long.

Milton, Lycida.

- FAUNIST.* n. s. [from faun.] One who attends to rural disquisitions; a naturalist.

Moderns.

Some future faunist, a man of fortune, will, I hope, extend his visits to Ireland; a new field to the naturalist.

White's Selborne, p. 107.

- TO FAVOUR.† v. a. [favo, Lat.]

1. To support; to regard with kindness; to be propitious to; to countenance.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol.

Spenser, Muscipetor.

The self-same gods that arm'd the queen of Troy,
May favour Tamora the queen of Goths.

Titus Andronicus.

Men favour wonders.
Fortune so favoured him, that the town at his first coming surrendered unto him.

Knight, Hist. of the Turks.

The good Æneas am I call'd; a name,
While fortune favours, not unknown to fame.

Dryden.

Oh happy youth! and faunus'd of the skies,
Distinguish'd care of guardian deities.

Pope, Odyss.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle.

Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon.

Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

— Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot.

Shakespeare.

Yet we enter into open act,
And Faunus, 'twere no loss if't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be.

B. Jonan.

Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace:
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here.

Dryden.

6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.

All these his wond'rous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favour; him, for whom
All these his works so wond'rous be ordain'd.

Milton, P. L.

7. Something given by a lady to be worn.

And every one his love suit will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.

Shaks.

It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favour, may as well do it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remnant of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old.

Spectator.

8. Any thing worn openly as a token.

Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

9. Feature; countenance. It is now little used.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in shortness.

Sidney.

Young though thou art, thine eye
Hath staid upon some favour that it loves. Shaks.
Dissect thy favour with an unwarped beard.

Shakespeare, Othello.

There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings?

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

A youth of five favour and shape.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls, make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies.

Ray.

- FAVOURABLE. adj. [favourable, French; favorabilis, Latin.]

1. Kind; propitious; affectionate.
Famous Flautes! most gracious prince,
Lead favourable ear to our requests.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Palliative; tender; averse from censure.
None can have the favourable thought,
That to obey a tyrant's will they fought.

Regens.

FAVOUR'D.† participial adj. [from favour.]

1. Regarded with kindness.
Oh with some favour'd traveller they stay,
And shine before him all the desert way.

Pope, Odyss.

2. Featured. See the ninth sense of the substantive favour. Always conjoined with well or ill, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Spenser, and the Bible. But this is not exclusively the case, as the other example, which I add, will shew, and which indeed exhibits a word still common in conversation.

Of her there tread

A thousand young ones which she daily fed;
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs, each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. Spens. F. Q.
The ill-favoured and lean-floxed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine.

A favourite has no friend. Gray.

2. One chosen as a companion by a superior; a mean wretch whose whole business is by any means to please.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites.

I was a Theban gentleman, who, by mischance, having killed a favourite of the prince of that country, was pursued so cruelly, that in no place but by favour or corruption they would obtain my destruction.

The great man down, you mark, his fav'rite, flies;

This poor advanc'd, makes friends of enemies.

Bid her steal into the plashed lower,
Where hoarse-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,

Made proud by princes that advance their pride
Against that power that they dread.

Nothing is more vile than, nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waiting time, and suspect of satiety.

This man was very capable of being a great favourite to a great king.

What fav'rite gain, and what the nation owns,
Fly the forgetful world.

FA'VOURITE. * adj. Beloved; regarded with favour. The two following examples stand in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary as illustrations of the substantive; and of the adjective no notice is taken.

Every particular master in criticism has his favourite passages to an author. Addison, Spect.
So fathers speak, persuasive speech and mild!
Their sage experience to the favourite child.

Pope, Odys.

Did slide. Chapman, Tind.

FA'USENBRAYE. * n. s. A small mount of earth, four fathom wide, erected on the level round the foot of the rampart, to fire upon the enemy, when he is so far advanced that you cannot force him back; and also to receive the ruins which the cannons make in the body of the wall. Harris.

FA'UTOR. * n. s. [Lat. fautior, Fr. faveur; countenance; supporter.

I am neither author or fauter of any sect: I will have no man admit himself to me; but, if I have any thing right, defend it as truth; not mine. B. Jonson.

The new mountain in the Lucerne lake, which is alleged by the fautors of this opinion, as an instance in behalf of it, was not raised thus. Hoodward.

FA'UTRESS. * n. s. [fautrix, Lat. fautrice, Fr.] A woman that favours, or shows countenance.

It made him pray, and prove Mioern's aid his fautress still. Chapman, Tind.
He comes from banishment to the fautress of liberty, from the barbarous to the polite.

Garth, Dedict. to Ovid.

FAWN. † n. s. [faon, Fr. from fan, in old Fr. a child probably from infans, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. Fan is the old French word for a fawn itself, or for the young of any beast. V. Cotgrave in FAN. Borel derives it from infans.] A young deer.

Looking my love, I go from place to place,
Like a young fawn that late hath lost the hind;
And seek each where, where last I saw his face,
Whose image yet I carry fresh in mind.

Spenser, Sonnets.

The buck is called the first year a fawn, the second year a pricket. Shaks. L. Lab. Lou.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
For him as kindly spreads the flow'ry lawn. Pope.

TO FAWN. * v. n. [Fr. faonner.] To bring forth a fawn. Cotgrave, and Sharnwood.

The does then do fawn.

Bullough, in F. F. Encycloped.

TO FAWN. † v. n. [of uncertain original; perhaps a contraction of the French fan-fan, a term of fondness for children, Dr. Johnson says; but it is perhaps from the Sax. fægnian, which bears the meaning of to speak fair, to wheedle.]

1. To court by friking before one; as a dog.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.

Holding Coriol in the name of Rome, Sidney.
Even like a fawning greyhound. Shaks. Coriol.

2. To court by any means. Used by animals.

Instead thereof he kin'd her weary feet,
And lick'd her lily hands with fawning tongue.

As he her very d innocence did weat. Spens. F. Q.
Is it not strange that a rational man should worship an ox? that he should fawn upon his dog? bow himself before a cat? and adore leeks and garlic? South.

3. To court servilely.

My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns;
What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend?

And thou, thy hypocrite, who now would'st be Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd, and, crying'd, and servilely ador'd?
Heav'n's awful monarch? Milton, P. L.

Whom Aeneas follows with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryd. Æn.

Drest now the craving fawning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to 'scape some flattery to thy page.

FAWN. † n. s. A servile cringe; low flattery. You will rather show our gentle lords
How you can frown, than fawn upon them

For the inheritance of their loves. Shaks. Coriol.
Thou'lt flatter, Horace, for thy free and wholesome sharpness.

Which pleaseth Caesar more than tervile fawns. B. Jonson, Festaster.

FA'WNER. † n. s. [from fawn.] One that fawns; one that pays servile courtship.

Our talking is trustless, our ears do abound;
Our fawners dread faithful friendship a foe.

Mir. for Mag. p. 55.
By softness of behaviour we have arrived at the appellation of fawners.

FA'WNING. * n. s. [from fawn.] Gross or low flattery; the act of servilely cringing.

Low-crook'd curties, and base spanish fawning. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Crown's fawnings are a base salvation.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.
The fawnings and the wiles of court.

Falstaff, Disc. on Ecclus. ii. 11.
He that hath

Devised the fawnings of a future generation.
Mansinger, Remigade.

FA'WNINGLY. † adv. [from fawn.] In a cringing servile way.

He that so fawningly entreats the soul to sin,
will now as bitterly upbraid it for having sinned.

South, Sermon. ix. 28.

FA'XED. † adj. [from pex, Sax. hair.] Hairly. Bailey gives fax for hair.

They could call a comet a faxed star, which is all one with stella cristata, or cometa.

Cumden, Rem.
FAY. † n. s. [fée, Fr. See FAIRY.]

1. A fairy; an elf.

And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night-stars.

Leaving their misty train, Milton, Old Nat.
The birds' songs suppose, that after the battle of Camlan in Cornwall, where traitorous Morard was slain, and Arthur wounded, Morgan le Fay, a great elfin lady, conveyed the body hither to cure it.

Selden on Dryden's Polydore, S. 3.
Ye sylphs and sylphs, to your chief give ear;
Fay, fairies, geni, elves, and demour boar!

Pope.
From her, [the Persian poet, Mevjan,] we may fairly derive Ariosto's "la fata Morgana":—
from her likewise we may derive our Morgan le Fay, the patroness of Arthur in romantic lore, and his conductress to the land of Fairy.

Hale on the Arab. Nights' Entert. p. 15.
2. Faith. [Fr. foy, fay; Span. fey] Wholly obsolete.

Their ill 'aviour garres men missey,
Both of their doctrine and their fey.

syken, Dutch, to strike.] To whip; to chastise; to beat.

When a knotty point comes, I lay my head close to it with a snuff-box in my hand; and then I feague it away I tell thee.

Duke of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

FE'AL. adj. [Feel, Norm. French, "feel et leel," faithful and loyal, Kellham; later Fr. feal.] Faithful. Not now in use among the English; but still, I believe, among the Scotch.

The tenants by knights' service used to swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. faithful and loyal.

Chambers.
To FEAL. v. a. [Teut. helan, Icel. fel, occulto. Craven Dial.] To hide; to conceal. A northern word.

He that feals can find. Grav.
FE'ALTY. n. s. [Fealty, old Fr. of the eleventh century; foiella, Ital. fidelitas, Lat.] Duty due to a superior lord;
fidelity to a matter; loyalty.

I am in parliament pledge for thy truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Let my sovereign
Command my eldest son, say all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love. Shaks. Hen. IV.

Man disloyalty,
Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of Heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Each bird and beast behold
After their kinds: I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
With low subjection. Milton, P. L.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb Conjugal love. Milton, P. L.

FEAR. v. a. [Goth. faurhan, to fear;

freo, sorrowful.]

1. Dread; terror; painful apprehension of danger.

Fear is an uneasiness of the mind, upon the thought of future evil likely to befall us. Locke.

VOL. II.

Trembling fear still to and fro did fly,
And found no place where safe she shrowd him might. Spenser, F. Q.

For fear was upon them, because of the people of those countries. Evans, Ill. 3.
Behold me in my sex; I am no soldier;
Tender, and full of fears, our blushing sex is,
Unhardened with resolute thoughts.

Beum. and Fl. Knight of Malin.
What then remains? Are we depriv'd of will?
Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill?

Dryden, Jun.
Fear, in general, is that passion of our nature whereby we are excited to provide for our security upon the approach of evil.

2. Awe; dejection of mind at the presence of any person or thing; terror impressed: with of before that which im-presseth.

shall be upon every beast. Gen. ix. 2.

3. Anxiety; solicitude.
The principal fear was for the holy temple.

2 Mac. xv. 10.

4. That which causes fear.
Still, as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
As if his fear still follow'd him behind.

Spenser, F. Q. l. ix. 21.
I will mock when your fear cometh, when your fear cometh as desolation. Prov. i. 26.

Antony, stay not by his side;
Thy demon, that's the spirit that keeps thee here,
is Noble, courageous, high, unsummarable,
Where Caesar's is not; but near him, thy angel
Becomes a fear, as being o'erpower'd.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

5. The object of fear.
Except the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with me. Gen. xxi. 42.

6. Something hung up to scare deer by its colour or noise.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare.

Is. xxiv. 18.

FEAR. n. s. [poeps, Saxon.] A companion. Obsolete. The true word is fere.

There is forgiveness with thee, that Thou mayest be feared. Psalms cxxx. 4.

To FEAR. v. n.

1. To live in terror; to be afraid.

Well you may fear too far, sir—
—Safer than trust too far:

Let me still take away the harms I fear,
Nor fear still to be taken. Shakespeare, K. L.

If any such be here, if any fear
Less for his person than an ill report;
If any think brave death outweighs bad life.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To be anxious.

Then let the greedy merchant fear
For his ill-gotten gain;

And pray to Gods that will not hear,
While the debating winds and billows bear
His wealth into the main. Dryden, Horace.

See, pious king, with diff'rent strife,
Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn:
So much, she fears for William's life,
That Mary's fate she dare not mourn. Prior.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

So when the new-born phoenix first is seen,
Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen.
Dark'ning the sky, they hover 'er and shroud
The wanton sailers with a feather'd cloud. Prior.
Then ships of uncouth form shall deem the tide,
And feather'd people crowd my wealthy side. Pope.
Vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and among many other feathered creatures, several little winged boys perch upon the middle straits.
Addison, Spect.

2. Fitted with feathers; carrying feathers.
An eagle had the ill hap to be struck with an arrow, feather'd from her own wing. L'Etangne.
Not the bow they bend, nor boast the skill
To give the feather'd arrow wings to kill.
Pope, Odyssey.

3. Swift; winged, like an arrow.
Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours. Sunday, Job, p. 12.
New think this while our feathered minutes may Fall under measure; Time itself can stay.
Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 43.

4. Smoothed, like down or feathers.
As if it were a sign of godliness, and a mark of God's favourites, to be affected with softness, feathered with soft and delicate phrases, and pointed with pathetic accents! Scott, Works, &c. p. 124.

FEATHERED, n. s.

Boards or planks that have one edge thinner than another, are called feather- edge stuff. Mozon, Mech. Exercises.

FEATHERED, adj. [feather and edge.]
Belonging to a feather edge.

The cover must be made of feathered boards,
by the nature of several doors with hinges fixed thereon. Mortimer.

FEATHERFEW, n. s. A plant both single and double; it is increased by seeds or slips, and also by dividing the root: it flowereth most part of the summer.

FEATHER-GRASS, n. s. [gramen plumosum.]
An herb.

FEATHERLESS† adj. [Sax. fæþerleas.]
Having few or no feathers.

This so high grown try was like that featherless
bird which went about to beg plumes of other birds to cover his nakedness. Houell, Voe. Forest.

FEATHERLY, adj. [from feather.] Resembling feather.

The section or pluvius agglutination of hail about the mother and fundamental angles thereof, seems to be some featherly particle of snow, although snow itself be hexangular. Brown.

FEATHERSELLER, n. s. [feather and seller.]
One who sells feathers for beds.

FEATHERY† adj. [from feather.]

Count the night-watches to his feathery dames.
Milton, Comus.

2. Light as a feather.
Transitory migrations seem light and feathery.
Doune, Lett. to Sir H. C. Poems, p. 285.
Feathery and light stuff, that hath no good substance in it.
Whately, Redempt. of Time, (1634), p. 25.

FEATLY† adv. [from feat.] Neatly;
nimble; dexterously.

Foot it feately here and there,
And sweet sprites the burthen bear. Sh. Tempest.
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That feately footing seem'd to skim the ground.
Dryden.

We are bluntly told — not neatly and feately.
Echard, Observ. (1696), p. 61.

FEATNESS†, n. s. [from feat.] Neatness;
nicety; dexterity. Huotet, and Sherwood.
FEATOUS* adj. See FEATEOUS.

FEATOUSLY* adv. See FEATEOUSLY.
Nimble; neatly. This is the word in Chaucer, not feateously.

The morrice rigors, while bobby horse doth foot
it feately. Benson & Fl. Kn. of the Burn, Feate.

FEATURE†, n. s. [feiture, old French].

1. The cast or make of the face.
Report the feature of Octavia, her years. Shaks.

Any lineament or single part of the face.
Though ye be the fairest of God's creatures,
Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features.
Synarar.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history.
Addison on Metals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face. Addison, Ovid.

3. The whole turn of the body; the fashion;
the make.

She also doll'd her beavy habergeon
Which the fair feature of her limbs did hide.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. Workmanship.

Here they (the witches) speak as if they were creating some new feature, which the devil persuades them to be able to do often, by the pronouncing of words, and pouring out of liquors on the earth.
Dr. Johnson, his own Notes on his Manuscr.

To FEATURE† v. a. To resemble in countenance; to favour. Dr. Johnson cites, as an illustration of this word, the passage which I have given to the verb feat; the true word being feated; and featured an unwarrantable alteration.

FEATURED* adj. [from feature.]

1. Having handsome features.

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured. Shakespeare, Much Ado.
Rich thou art, featured thou art, featured thou art.
Greene, Foreword to Fido, (1611.)

2. Having a good or bad form, shape, or features.

Richard the third — ill featured of limbs.
Sir T. More, Descript. of S. Rich. III.
Hornes better featured, or more servicable than
now. Haknall on Providence, p. 36.

3. Resembling in feature or countenance.

Wishing me like to one more rich in hopes,
Featur'd he'll like him, like him with friends possess'd.
Shakespeare, Sonnet.

What are the noblest ornaments, but deaths
Turn'd flatterers of life in paint, or marble.
The well-stain'd canvas, or the featur'd stone!
Young, Night Th. 9.

To FEAZE v. a. [faize, French].

1. To untwist the end of a rope, and reduce it again to its first stamens.

2. To beat; to whip with rods. Ainsworth.

To FEBRICATE v. n. [fabricator, Latin].

To be in a fever.

FEBRIFICK* adj. [old Fr. febrifigue.]

Tending to produce fever.

The febrile humour fell into my legs.
Lord Chatterfield.

FEBRICULOS, adj. [fabriculosus, Latin].

Troubled with a fever.

FEBRIFUGE, n. s. [febris and fugo,
Latin; febrifuge, French.] Any medicine serviceable in a fever. Quincy.

Bitters, like choler, are the best anguifuges, and also the best febrifuges. Flager on the Humours.

FEBRIFUGE, adj. Having the power to cure fevers.

Febrifuge draughts had a most surprising good effect. Arbuthnot.

FEBRILE, adj. [febrilis, Latin; febril, Fr.].

Constituting a fever; proceeding from a fever.

The spirits, embroiled with the malignity in the blood, and turgid and tumefied by the febrile fermentation, or by phlebotomy relieved.

FEBRUARY, n. s. [februarius, Latin].

The name of the second month in the year.

You have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm, and cloudiness! Shaks.

FEBRUATION, n. s. [Lat. februatus, purified or cleansed by sacrifice.] A rite, among the Gentiles, of purifying, a sacrifice.

Some fantastic rites and februations to chase away mormons and speckles.

Spenser on Prodigies, p. 227.
Superstition—expressed in an infinity of februations and empty forms.
Ibid. p. 238.

FE'CAL. adj. See FECAL. [Fr. fecal, "la matiere fecale," Cotgrave.]

FE'CES. n. s. [feces, Lat., feces, Fr.]

1. Dregs; lees; sediment; subsidence.
Hence the surface of the ground with mud and slime heaves; the fears of the flood, I'vee'd the rays of heav'n; and sucking in The seeds of heav'n, new creatures did begin. Dryd.

2. Excrement.

The symptoms of such a constitution are a sour smell in their feces. Arbuthnot on Aliens.

FE'CALESS. adj. A common word in Cumberland, and other parts of the north, denoting spiritless, feeble, weak; and perhaps a corruption of effecless.

FE'CULENCE. n. s. [feculentia, Latin.]

1. Muddiness; quality of abounding with lees or sediment.

2. Lees; feces; sediment; dregs.
"Four upon it some very strong lees, to facilitate the separation of its feculencies." Boyle.

Whether the wilding's fibres are contriv'd To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its feculency, which in soore porous coats Of cyder plants finds passage free. Philips.

FE'CULENT. adj. [feculentus, Latin, feculent, French.] Foul; druggy; excrementitious.

But both his hands, most silky feculent, Above the water were on high extent, And fair'd to wash themselves incessantly, Yet nothing cleaner were for such intent.

Spenser, F. Q.
They are to the body as the light of a candle to the gross and feculent soul, which as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its impurity. Glanville, Apology.

FE'COND. adj. [fecundus, Latin; fecund, French.] Fruitful; prolific.

The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.
FE'CONDATION. n. s. [fecundo, Latin.] The act of making fruitful or prolific.

She requested these plants as a medicine of fecundation, or to make her fruitful. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FE'CONDIFY. v. a. To make fruitful; to make prolific. Dict.

FE'CONDITY. n. s. [from fecund; fécondité, French.]

1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the annals and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it. Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years, and I have found that melon seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren our being exhausted. Bradley.

FED. Preterite and participle pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breast'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FE'DARY. n. s. [fedus, Latin, or from fedum.] This word, peculiar to Shakspeare, may signify either a confederate, a partner, or a dependant.

Demetrius! paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without. Shakspeare, Cymb.

FE'DERAL. adj. [from fedus, Latin.] Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and Heathens, was wont to be. Hemsted.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Grew.

FE'DERARY. n. s. [from fedus, Latin.] A confederate; an accomplice.

She's a traitor, and Camillo is A fedary with her. Shakspeare.

FEDERATE. adj. [federalis, Latin.] Leagued; joined in confederacy.

FEDERATIVE. adj. [from federate.] Having power to make a league or contract.
(They suggest to them leagues of perpetual amity, at the very time when the power, to which our constitution has exclusively delegated the possession of this kingdom, may find it expedient to make war upon them. Burke on the French Revolution.)

FEDERATION. n. s. [from federate.] A league.

It is obliged to keep any terms with these confederations, who hold out to us as a pattern for imitation, the proceedings in France? Berrio.

FED'ITY. n. s. [Lat. feditus.] Baseness; turpitude; inherent vileness.

A second [impediment] may be the fedity and unattractiveness of the match, when the parties incessantly marry. Hill, Cases of Conscience, iv. 10.

Some fedities common amongst the Gnosticks, not fit to be named.

Hill, Livingtons, Mormons compared, &c. p. 65.

FEE. n. s. [peoh, Sax. fee, Danish, cat; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

So far Dr. Johnson. The Saxon word denotes, like the Gothic, faithus, goods, possessions of any kind. So the Gael and the Sa. Guth. fee. See also FOOD. Some think that because those, who held in fee, obtained the appellation of fideler, the word may be derived from the Latin fidet, faith; Fr. fe, feid, fei; low Latin fedum, feudum. See Brady's Gloss. Old Eng. Hist. p. 45, and Bochermeri Principia Juris Feudalis, p. 11. Others, that fedus, an agreement, is the etymon. But the northern language gives the origin: "Vas auk habauds faithu manas," i. e. "for he had great possessions." Hence also food, and the goods given, were for the sustenance of the vassal. Feudum is not to be found in writings before the eleventh century. See FEDUAL.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgement of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the price in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum ad utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail; fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever; fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer when he would let, Or sell fee-simples in his master's name.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, entering his fee-simple without leave. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?
The general cause, or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single broom? Shakspeare, Macb.

3. Reward; gratification; recompence.

These be the ways by which, without reward, Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison, Spectator.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fee. Tower.
FEE'-FARM. n. s. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superior lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the Pope, and took them back again to hold in fee-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his life-time after he was posessed with fear. Darwin.

To FEE' v. a. [Su. Goth. far, reward.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for heliobore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise.

Dryden, Pers.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; fee' every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.
She hath an ear, and a waiting chamber,
A page, a cushion; these are fee'd and fee'd,
And yet for all that will be paying.

Broom, and Fl. Nob. Gentlemen.

The unfamiliar cognizance of a fee'd gamester.
Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

3. To keep in hire. Dr. Jamieson seems to find fault with Dr. Johnson for thus rendering the word as used by Shakspeare; and says, that it properly denotes the act of hiring.

There's not a shane of them but in his house
I have a servant fee'd. Shakespeare, Macb.

FEEBLE adj. [old French, feble, feeble; modern foible; Latin, debilis.]
Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron. xxviii.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryd. En.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falling tongue;
My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryd.
We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FEEBLE v. a. [from the noun.]
To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not now perhaps in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and artful assault
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feeble quite.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement.

Shakespeare, E. John.

A life *feeble*d with natural infirmities.
Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615), sign. A. 5. b.
Many a burling sun

Has rear'd my body and heild'd up my blood,
*Feeble*d my knees, and stamp'd e meagreness Upon my figure. Broom, and Fl. Id. Prie.

FEEBLEMINDED adj. [feeble and mind.]
Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble- mined, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thes. v. 14.

FEEBLENESS n. s. [from feeble; old French, febles; and so Spenser once uses feebleness for the present word,
F. Q. iv. viii. 37. Chaucer has feeble- ness.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity;
want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness.
Dr. Andronicus.

Some in their latter years, through the feeble- ness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FEEBLY adv. [from feeble.] Weakly;
without strength.

Like mine thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.

Dryden.

To FEED v. a. [fodan, Gothick; foda,
Sw. petan, yoeban, Sax. fodr. Icel. food.
See also FEEL.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the bounds that help'd him to pursue.

Dr. Andronicus.

Borheave feed a sparrow with bread four days,
in which time it eat more than its own weight.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them to fast. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands,
if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them
in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter.

Mortimer.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love! Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarous learned the strength of the vin-pocor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty.

Knollys.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satisty.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.

To FEED v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals' food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the savor to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare, Macb.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;
Nor rare I who doth feed upon my cost.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which also
Would feed on one another. Shakespeare, Coriol.
Galen speaketh of the curing of the liver by milk of a cow that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Broom.

He feeds on fruits which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford.

Dryden, Virg.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice,
milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.

Pope, Essay on Man.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Ex. xiii. 5.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fourth deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shuddering kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.
An old worked ox eats as well as a young one;
their feed is much cheaper, because they eat not so fast. Mortimer.

2. Pasture.

Besides his coat, his socks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale. Shakespeare, As you like it.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Pleanty hung

Tempting so high, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not; for such pleasure kill that hour.
At feed or fountain never had I found. Mit. P. L.

FEE'DER n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.

Abel was a keeper [in the margin, a feeder] of sheep. Genesis, iv. 2.

Swissish gluttony

Ne'er looks to heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted head ingratitude
Craves, and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, COMM.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Dehman.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.
The tutor end the feeder of my riots. Sho. H. IV.

derstanding, the feeder of humours.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. p. 178.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Shakespeare, As you like it.

But that our fests

In every morn have falls, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shakespeare, Hist. Tole.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the miset-thrush, or feed upon miset-corn.
Broom, Vulg. Err.

4. One that eats in a certain mode; as, a nice feeder, a gross feeder.

But such nice feeders are no guests for me;
Not agrees not with frugality;
Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of livery.

Dryden, Jao.

FEED'ING n. s. [Sax. febing.] Pasture.
See FED.

Feeding the feeding, for which he had told'd
To have kept safe, by these vile cattle spoil'd.

Dryden's Poems, Moon-calf.

To FEEL pret. felt; part. pass. felt. v. n.
[pelan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison, Spect.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.

They should seek the Lord, if happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts, xviii. 27.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.
Of those tumours one feels flaccid and rumpled; the other more even, flaccid and springy.
Sharp, Surgery.

To FEEL. v. a.

1. To perceive by the touch.
Suffer me that I may feel the pillars.

Judges, xxvi. 26.

2. To try; to sound.

He hath writ thus to feel my affection to your louour. Shakespeare.

3. To have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to move herself by. Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.
Milton, P. L.

But why should those be thought to 'scape, who feel

Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel?
Crevin.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow up to it!
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

The well-sung woes shall sound my pensive ghost!

He best can paint them who can feel them most.
Pope.

Nor youthful kings in battle Asia's die,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair
Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself.
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FEEL. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp, Surgery.

FEELER. n. s. [from feel.] Sharp, Surgery.

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would stir the feeler's soul.
To the oath of loyalty. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. One that perceives mentally.

Of my longing to see you I am a better feeler
than a describer.

See His Vision to Sir E. Bacon, item. p. 399.

3. The horns or antennae of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennae; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennae, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleansing the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Durham, Physico-Theol.

FEELING. part. adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-decision!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration!
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sidney.

Thy walking words do Cupid's my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

Write till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and freeze some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's
blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Southey.

FEELING. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore?
Milton, P. L.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.
Bacon, Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself,
who spoke so feelingly.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here felt we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I soild and say,
This is no flattery; these are counsellers,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. I.

Shakespeare, As you like it.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh, Hist.

FEES. n. s. A race. Barret's Dict.

1580. He adds, "To leap without fetching any race or feese, nullo procuras salire." It is a word still used among boys; as, to take fees.

FEET. n. s. The plural of foot. [Sax.]

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet
with fears. Pope, Sotia.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Godfrey of Bouillon broched three feetless birds, called Alligators, upon his armor. Camden.
There beloud the mangled, headless, handless,
feetless corpses of their fellow-countrymen.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 196.

To FEIGN. v. a. [feigner, old French, of the eleventh century; feindre, modern; feign, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Admirable, inimitable, and worse
Than falsen yet have feign'd, or four comen'd,
Gorgons, and hydra, and chimerae dire!
Milton, P. L.

No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.
Nich. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most stilly feignent.
Above the water were on high extent.
Ad feign'd to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. To make a show of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Deila beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And that she laugh the willing fair is found.
Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly but their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Spenser, F. Q.

- To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore to poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nothing so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
Shakespeare.

- FEIGNEDLY.† adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Those that come feignedly, and those that come unfeignedly. Act. Ceremony on the Sacram. fol. 93.

Her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord. Jerem. li. 10.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the beatitudes. Bacon.

- FEIGNEDNESS. n. s. [from feigned.] Fiction; deceit.

The church is not the school of feignedness
and hypocrisy, but of truth and sincerity.
Harnar, Transl. of Deu's Ser. p. 39.

- FEIGNER. n. s. [from feign.] Inventor;
contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; as the thing done, the doing, and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning, and the feigner; so the poem, the poet, and the poet. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

- FEIGNING. n. s. [from feign.] A false appearance; an artful contrivance.

May her feignings
Not take your wisdoms; but this day she baird
A stronger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes.
B. Jonson, Fox.

- FEIGNINGLY. adv. [from feigning.] Craft-
ily. Hulot, and Sherwood.

- FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mild by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

- FEINT. n. s. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended be.

Courly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spect.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well best feints and future wars. Prior.

- FEINTERS. n. s. [feintiers, Fr. Cot-grave, "the small sorts of breed in bruised, surfeited, or foul-fed hawks;"
perhaps from feindre, full of small threads or fibres; filum, Lat. a thread.

Dr. Johnson merely cites Ainsworth as his authority for this word, without any etymology or example; but it appears that our word is not flander, but flander. Worms in livestock.
This may probably destroy that obstinate disease of the flander, or backworm.

Sir T. Brown, of Hawks, Miscell. p. 115.

To FELICITATE† v. a. [feliciter, Fr. to make happy or prosperous; and to compliment, Cotgrave; felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy. See FELICITATE.

Gifts—feliciter lovers.

Journal of Lorden's Journal, Dec. 1664, p. 76.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would ill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey!

Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speech, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow.

Brown.

FELICITATE* part. adj. [Lat. felicatus.]

Made happy.

I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate

Shaks. K. Lear.

FELICITATION, n. s. [from felicitate.] Congratulation.

Dict.

FELICITOUS† adj. [from felicitus, Lat.]

Happy; prosperous.

In all which (rare) she was felicitous and victorious.

Sir R. Naunton, From Reg. of Q. Elizabeth.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitus.]

Happily.

Dict.

FELICITY, n. s. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, French.]

Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity.

But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure be and careless ease.

Milton, P. R.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete.

Attorney.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable man, is revealed to our hopes by the gospel!

Rogers.

FELINE, adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail which is feline, or a long taper. Grew, Muscum.

FELL† adj. [pell, Saxon; fel, old French, cruel, tyrannical, fierce.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same.

Fairfax.

So *fell*est foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep.
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an angry stare
Frends.

Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.

I know thee, love! I wild as the raging main.

More fell than tigers on the Libyan plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellet of the fell. Thom. Spring.

FELL* n. s. [Sax. pel, gall, anger, melancholiness. Somer.]

Sweete Love, that doth his golden wings embay
In blessed nectar and pure Pleasure's well,
Untroubled of vile fear or bitter fell.

Spenser, F. Q. lib. xi. 2.

FELL† n. s. [pell, Saxon; fell, Goth. fell, Gr. cortex, Celt. pell, Lat. pellis.]

The skin; the hide. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakespeare.

We still use it, however, in the word fellmonger, which means a dealer in hides.

And fell, in the present sense, was once common. It is in the vocabulary of Bullokar.

Wipe those eyes!
The goar shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shaks. K. Lear.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal trotting raise and stir.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

He ought to shear not to flay his sheep; to take their fleeces, not their felles. B. Jonson, Diocor.

FELL* n. s. [German, fell, a rock; Icel. fel, acclivities, the fell-foot, or foot of the hill; αρι το φάδιν. Vide apud scholiasten in Arisoph. in Nubibus, A. I. S. 1. que transcripti ferè Suidas in voce ΦΕΛΛΑ. Ray. Mr. Whalley in his notes on Ben Jonson, who uses this word, refers, in explanation of it, to an interpretation of ΦΕΛΛΑΞ by Hesychius, viz. σκαρπε τῶν καὶ δυσπρυ; and adds, that we seem to have taken this sense from our Gothick ancestors. The Su. Goth. faell, is a ridge or chain of mountains; and the Icel. fel, or fell, is a small mountain resting on one larger and longer. Gl. Rymbeglar, as cited by Dr. Jamieson. In the north of England the word is to this day common for a rocky hill.]

1. A hill; a mountain.

So may the first of all our felles be thine,
And both the bestowing of our goats and kine,
As thou our folds doth still secure.

B. Jonson, Masopert.

This country abounds with mountains, which in the language of the country are called felles.

Burn and Nicolson, Hist. of Westmoreland, &c. l. 3.

Grey-stock town and castle lie about three miles from the Uwater over the felles. Grey's Letters.

2. A corruption of field. [Sax. pel], meaning as open country, formerly used by way of antithesis to frith, a forest.

Obsolete.

The Sylvas that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,
Both in the tufty frith, and in the mossy fell.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 17.

To FELL† v. a. [fallen, German; apfallen, Sax. to overthrow.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Vain stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a falling blow, now strikes again.

Davies.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock and *fell*ed him.

Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was fallen. Brown, Vir. Forc.

Of their whole host I *fell*ed
Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon *fell*ed
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.

Milton, S. A.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he *fell*ed him down.

And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Drayden.

I *fell*ed along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case.

3. To hew down; to cut down;

Then would he seem a farmer that would sell,
Bargains of wood which he had lately *fell*ed.

Spenser, Rubb. Tale.

They stepped all the wells of water, and *fell*ed all the good trees.

2 Kings, lib. 25.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flamm'd their fashions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so that they struck
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.

Drayden.

4. To sew in a particular manner; to inseam. This word is well known to the ladies, I believe, all over the kingdom; it ought to be in our dictionaries. Jennings, West-Country Words, 1825.

FELL. The pretreite of To fall.

Note on their feet might stand,
Though standing like as rocks; but down they fell.

Milton, P. L.

FELLER, n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

Id. ib. 8.

FELLI*FLOUS, adj. [fel, and flo, Latin.] Flowing with gall.

Dict.

FELLMONGER, n. s. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELLNESS† n. s. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood rail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellness loud he gan to weep.

Spenser, F. Q.

Dread, diarm'd,
Loose her fellness quite: All thanks to Him,
Who scour'd the venom out. R. Blair, the Grace.

FELLOE† n. s. [sometimes written fell; Sax. felga, Dutch, felge, or velge.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written felly or felly.

That out, thou strumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synd, take away her power!
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n!

Shakespeare.

Their axle-trees, naves, fellies, and spokes were all molten.

1 Kings, lib. 25.

FELLON,* n. s. A sore. See the second sense of FELON.

FELLOW† n. s. [quasi, to follow, Minshew; pe, faith, and laz, bound, Saxon, Junius; fellow, Scottish. So far Dr. Johnson. Minshew is right. The word is from the Goth. felag, community, fellowship, which Serenius derives from the verb felga, to follow. The Sax. pelap, a companion, must not be omitted, which Chaucer exactly follows in writing our word fellow.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself,
but not one of them came to a good end.

Academ. Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow
You may dany me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare, Tempest.

- Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
(The soul) should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love. Dryden.
2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mums the walls.
Dryden, Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still about complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.
- A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him
With his own hand, and took more care of him
Than of his flocks. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.
So you are to be hereafter fellows and no longer servants.
Shelley.

Chieftain of the rest
I close him here: earth shall him allow;
It follows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice;
the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Add. Sp.

6. One like or equal to another: as this knave hath not his fellow.

My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem;
but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
— The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shaks.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made him peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon, Aphor.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt; the foolish mortal;
the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.
Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish brats fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands.

Cassio hath been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scamp'd. Shaks.

I have great comfort from this fellow, methinks
he hath no drawing mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

How oft the night of meane, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st not thus been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.

Shakespeare, K. John.

The Moor's abuse'd by some most villanous
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

Shakespeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were wet.
J. Eustrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arm I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Nisyrus need
By fraud and theft assert his father's breed.

Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, collier-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth make the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Page.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree; then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.
There should be mixture of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

To FELLOW.† n. s. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And follow'st all things. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Fellowing himself with every thing that had life in it. By. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 100.

FELLOW-CITIZEN. n. s. One who belongs to the same city.

We are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints. Ephes. ii. 19.

FELLOW-COMMONER.† n. s.
1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot enclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all
man. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge, and eighty pounds per annum for a fellow-commoner, was looked on as a sufficient maintenance. Dean Prideaux to Id.

Townsend, (1715), Life, &c. p. 196.

FELLOW-COUNSELLOR. n. s. A member of the same council of state.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow-counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys.

Shaks. Hen. VIII.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes in this lower world. Watts, Logick, introd.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 1 John, 8.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this act of dedication.

Dryden, Jan. Del.

FELLOW-MADEN. n. s. A virgin that bears another virgin company.

She, all as happy as of all the faires,
Is, with her fellow-maidens, now within
The island's side. Shakespeare, Pericles.

FELLOW-MEMBER. n. s. Member of the same body or society.

We signify our being united, and knit not only to Christ our head, but also to each other, as fellow-members. Whole Duty of Man.

FELLOW-MINISTER. n. s. One who serves the same office.

You fool! I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate — my fellow-ministers
Are sinners involuntarily. Shaks. Tempest.

FELLOW-PER. n. s. One who enjoys the same privileges of nobility, as the peers of England do; whose titles are indeed different, but whose essential privileges are the same.

You shall not need, my fellow-peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

FELLOW-PRISONER. n. s. One confined in the same prison, or for the same cause.

Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners. Rom. xvi. 7.

Before St. Paul went to Rome, he was "in prisons oft;" — and so well might have many fellow-prisoners. Whitby on Rom. xvi. 7.

FELLOW-SCHOOLAR. n. s. One who studies in company with others.

You three, Biran, Dumain, and Longville,

My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less I think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man.

Milton, P. L.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted case
Than the bright dame's mine I serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Euphrates, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Ps. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts, Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes
the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures,
that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer!
And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison, Spect.

FELLOW-TRAVELLER. n. s. One who travels in company with others.

That want of sepulture was a grievous punishment, Homer in his Odyssey speaking of Ulysses, and Elipser his fellow-traveller being dead, gives us this authority. See T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

If he offer it to the hard, whether it be male or femelle, he shall offer it without beholding. Leviticus, iii. 1.

Men, more divine,
To'd with intellectual nose and soul.
Are masters to their females, and their lords.

Shakespeare.

FE'MALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton, S. A.
Swarming next appear'd

The female bee, that feeds her husband drone.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other sons, perhaps

With their attendant moons thou wilt decry,
Communicating male and female light,
Which two great sexes animate the world.

Milton, P. L.

Add what wants

In female sex, the more to draw his love.

Milton, P. L.

He scrupled not to rat

Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milt. P. L.
If by a female hand he had foreseen

He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

'Th' excess of heat is but a false;

We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spanish promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alasique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.

Dryden, Pref. to Annus Mirab.

FEME COVERT. n. s. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron.

FEN-LAND. n. s. [from fen and land, Sax. Chron.] Marshy land.

FENCE. n. s. [from defence, Dr. Johnson says; but defence is rather from fence, than fence from it. Fence is from the unusual Latin word fendo, to drive away; whence offendo, and defendo.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors.

There's no fence against insulations, earth-quake, or burrescences.

L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parent's view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them.

Locke.

Let us bear this awful corpse to Caesar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath.

Addis, Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invalidate th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep.

Dryd. Hor.

Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the distasteful sea, that, shut from thence,
Hours round the structure, and invades the fence?

Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair.

Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruis'd my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice.

Shakespeare.

That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.

Milton, Comus.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

'Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is hale;
In fenced towns livestock is in their grain,
Before Ursa can't this kingdom to invade.

Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
And set darkness in my paths.

Job, xiv. 6.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews.

Job, x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls.

2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure.

Atkyns, Purgrave.

2. To guard; to fortify.

No much of adder's wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries.

Milt. S. A.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.

Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it batten into words, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and long one another.

Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

View is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against.

Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throate sing, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

A brazen better in the wood is bred;
The steeping warriors aiming lead to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are batt'd in gore.

Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullocks' and gamsters' company.

Locke.

FENCE-MONTH. n. s. A word of the forest-law; meaning the month in which it is prohibited to hunt in any forest, as the does then fawn. It begins about the ninth of June, and continues till the ninth of July. There are also fence-monks for fish. Bullockar, and Chambers.

FENCEFUL. * adj. [fence and full.] Affording defence or protection.

Blue-eyed Minerva—

Chariots with brass to arm, and form the fenceful shield.
Congreve, Ulysses to France.
A fenceful shield. Pope, Odyssey 16.

FENCELESS. * adj. [fence.] Without inclosure; open.

The wall
Immovable of this now fenceless world. Milt. P. L.
Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive;
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling shore,
Alike from North, from South. Rowe, Jane Shore.

FENCEY. * n. s. [fence.] One who fences or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmeuse is great advantage; he that lets
Another cheat, may warn him as his fire.
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencees suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
A nimble fencee will put in a thrust so quick,
That the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Dryden.

FENCEIBLE. * adj. [fence.] Capable of defence. Dr. Johnson mentions Addison as using the word, but has overlooked Spenser, probably in consequence of the corrupted text of some editions which substituted sensible for the genuine word fenceible or fenceible.

No fort so fenceible, no walls so strong,
But that continual battery will rise.

Spenser, F. Q. W. 3. 10.

FENCEIBLES. * n. s. In the military history of our own times, such regiments as have been raised either expressly for the defence of our own country: or for a limited service; and for a given time.

FENCING. * n. s. [fence.] The art of fencing.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing.

FENCINGMASTER. * n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.
The fencing-master presents a foyle or fleuret to their scholars. Lord Herbert's Life, p. 46.

FENCINGSCHOOL. * n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is a good gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

TO FEND. * v. a. [Lat. fendo, to drive away.]

1. To keep off; to shew out.
Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the litter cold.
Dryden, Virg.

2. In naval language, to fend a boat, is to defend it from being dashed against rocks, the shore, or the side of a ship.

TO FEND. * v. n.
1. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

Such fending, and such proving.
Brown and Pl. Beau. Lascivious.
The dexterous management of arms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

2. To be industrious; to work hard. A northern word. Westmoreland and Craven Dial. and Wilberham's Cheshire Gloss.

3. Used in some parts of the north also in inquiries after a person's health: as, "How fend ye, Mister Ritson, how fend ye?" Cumberland Customs, &c. p. 23.

FENDER. * n. s. [fend.]
1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall, from rolling forward to the floor.

1. Held from another.

2. Belonging to a feud or tenure.

The feodal discipline extended itself every where, and influenced the conduct of the courts, and the manners of the people, with its own irregular martial spirit. Burke, Ath. Eng. Hist. iii. 1.

FEODALITY. * n. s. [old Fr. feodalité.] The possession of, or seigniority over, divers fiefs; feudal tenure; feudal law.

Cotgrave.

The traders teach the people to reject all feodality as the subversion of liberty.

FEODARY. * n. s. [from feodum, Latin.] One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superior lord. This word is cited by Dr. Johnson upon the authority of Sir T. Hamner, who has thus defined feodary in his note on feodary in Shakespeare. See FEDARY. But the feudal vassal, as Mr. Malone observes, was not called a feodary, but a feodatory or feudatory. A feodary was an officer appointed by the court of wards to be present with, and assistant to, the escheators in every county at the finding of officers, and to give in evidence for the king. Stat. 32. Hen. viii. ch. 46. See also Bullockar's Expositor.

FEODATARY. * n. s. [Lat. feudatarius.] A tenant who holds his estate by feudal service. See FEDATARY.

FEODATORY. * adj. Holding from another by some conditional tenure.

Any beneficiary or feodatory king.

Bacon, Observe, on a Litel, 1502.

TO FEOFF. * v. a. [feoff, old French; seff, seffier, French; seffire, low Latin.]

To put in possession; to invest with right.

Coburn with three of that blessed patrimony, so feoffed upon them, so possessed of them, that they can never be disjoined.

Dn. Hall, Breath of the Dream Sol., p. 29.
If any man have a mind to feoff a curse upon himself and his posterity, let him delude his fingers with the holy thimbles of God. Reasonable Sermon, p. 49.

By spirit men feoff, when they father false doctrine upon the spirit; by words, when they feoff it upon true doctrine.

Stafford's Learned Discourses, p. 251.

FEOFF. * n. s. A fief. See FEE.

By these sales the third part of the best feoffs in France came to be possessed by the clergy.

Fulker, Holy War, p. 16.

FEOFFER. * n. s. [feoffe, i. e. feudatarius, old French, of the eleventh century; seffatus, Lat.] One put in possession.

The last earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, caused secretly all his lands to feoff in trust, in hope to have cut off her majesty from the chest of his lands.

Spenser on Ireland.

FE'OFFER. † n. s. [old French, feoffer; low Latin, feoffator. One who gives possession of any thing. See FEOFFMENT.
Hulot, and Sherwood.

FE'OFFEMENT. † n. s. [feoffment, old French; feoffamentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immovable things, to another in fee simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail.
Concel.

Divers young gentlemen proffered large feoffments, but in vain. Tutor's News out of Burgul.
Patrons of both churches on account of their feoffments, and with the consent of Falk Burrougham, archdeacon of Oxford.

FERA'CIOUS.* † adj. [ferax, Latin.] Fertile; fruitful.

Those ages have been most feracious in the production of such persons. Shilling's, Orig. Sacri, &c.
Like an oak,
Nurs'd on feracious Aegidium.

FERA'CITY. † n. s. [feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility.

FE'RAL.* † adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; deadly.

Such feral accidents can want and penury produce.
Barton, Ann. of Met. p. 164.

The world is miserably tormented and shaken with wars; dearth, famine, inundations, plagues, and many feral diseases, reign among us. Dict.

Barton, Ann. of Met. p. 679.
By the wan moon-beam oft the bird of night
Lengthens her feral oar.

Hedley on the Ruins of Bromholm Priory.

FERE.* † n. s. [Sax. fepra, fepera.] A companion; a mate; an equal. Formerly used either for husband or wife. In ferre is also an old expression for together, in company; and sometimes written ferre. Gower uses fefferre, and B. Jonson the same, for befellows.

We shall be ferre,
As Orpheus and Eurydice his ferre.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. iv. 791.
Charisma to a lovely ferre

Was linked, and by him had many pledges done.
Spenser, F. G. i. 2. 4.

FE'RETORY.* † n. s. [feretrum, Lat.] A place in churches where the bier is set.
Coler.

A third shrine was prepared, whereon to place the other two, and inclose his sacred body. The upper part of this feretory was all covered with plate of the purest gold.
Spenser, F. G. i. 2. 4.

FE'RIAL.* † adj. [ferialis, Lat.] Respecting the common days of the week; sometimes, holidays.

Concerning the ferial character: The ecclesiastical year, of old, began at Easter, the first week whereof was all holiday, that day being distinguished by prima, secunda, tertia, &c. added unto feria; from thence the days of any other week began to be called feria prima, secunda, &c.
Gregorius, Psalms, (1650,) p. 134.

[They] did learn to dance, and to sing, and to play on instruments on the ferial days.
Dugdale, Orig. Judic. ch. 55.

FERIATION. † n. s. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriatio in nature, this season is commonly termed the physician's vacation.
Brown.

FE'RIE.* † n. s. [ferie, old French; feria, Latin.] Any day of the week not kept holy. Bullokar. Yet Wicliffe uses feries for holidays. But a common day seems to have been the usual meaning of the word.

My feast is turned into simple ferie.
Dance of Machabree, fol. 291. b.

FE'RINE.* † adj. [ferin, old Fr. ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untamable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves, bears.

There are brutish and untamable desires, which the philosopher calleth ferine and inhumanities.
Np. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

FE'RINNESS. † n. s. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferinness.
Hole.

FE'RITY.* † n. s. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness. Alferity and inhumanity being laid aside.

Perron on the Creed, Art. 2.
The ferity of such minds bears no rule in realizations.
Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

[They] live by the rules of ferity and lust, and differ from the beasts seemingly in little else but external shape.
Gloucester, Serm. p. 395.

He reduced him from the most awful and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TO FERK.* See TO FIRM.

FERM.* † n. s. [Sax. ferm; old Fr. ferme.] 1. Rent; farm.

Ferm signified rent both in England and in France, says Madon, in his Vins Burgi: he might have added Scotland.

Chalmers, Sir D. Lindsay, Gleu.

2. Lodging-house. The Saxon word is used both for hospitality and an inn or lodging, like the Latin, hospitium; and Spenser's expression is literally the Latin ex hospitio discedere, to leave one's lodging.

His sinful soul with desperate disdain
Out of her ferm fled dire to the place of pain.

Spenser, F. G. iii. v. 23.

TO FERMENT. † v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye ye'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods best,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

Pope.

TO FERMENT.* † v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

If wine or cider do ferment twice, it will be harder, than if it had fermented but once.

Nolle's Cider in Evelyn's Pomona.

FE'RMEN. † n. s. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.] 1. That which causes intestine motion.

The women put females into a ferme, upon impregnation; and all animal humours, which poison, are putrifying ferments. Flyger on the Humours.
2. Intestate motion; tumult.

Subdus and cool the ferment of desire.

Rogers, Serm.
FERME'NTABLE. † adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. † adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cumblers, being materials, fill the veins with crude and windy seroties, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and ferment of the stomach.
Brown.

FERMENTATION. † n. s. [fermentatio, Lat.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens.
Hople.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which turns them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.
Culver of Fricadelle.

The sap, in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable crowd of sense of things.

Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. † adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatic spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.

FERMENTATIVENESS.* † n. s. [from fermentative.] Capability of fermenting.

The white of the egg he concluded, from its fermentativeness, to be impregnated with air.

Dr. Tyson, Hist. R. S. (1684), iv. 172.

FE'RMILET.* † n. s. [fermailet, old Fr.] A buckle or clasp.

Those stones were sustained or stayed by buckles and fermailets of gold for some brimness.

Dr. Hume, Hist. of the Sept. p. 49.

FERN. † n. s. [reapn. Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children.
Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern, and intricate with thore;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn.

Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FE'RTICLES.* † n. s. pl. Fleckles on the skin resembling the seeds of the fern.

Craven Dialect. Pronounced farmicles.

FE'RVY.* † adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

Ferny ground [is] a place where many ferns grow. Barret, Adv. 1580.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-hair. Dryden.

FEROCIOUS adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French].

1. Savage; fierce.
Savely rose in majesty of mūd;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with onset. Pope.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.
The hare that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfluity; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FEROCIOUSLY adv. [from ferocious.] In a savage, or in a rapacious, manner.

FEROCIOUSNESS n. s. [from ferocious.] Fierceness; savageness.

FEROCITY n. s. [ferocias, Latin; ferocité, French, from ferocius.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Addison, Guardian.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Iohopistile, full of ferocity. Philly, Briton.

FERREOUS adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or magnetic nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FERRET n. s. [fured, Welsh; furet, Fr. ferret, Dutch; viverra, Lat.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits. They are said to have been brought thither from Africa.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having threatening not only in her ferret eyes, but while she spoke, her nose seemed to threaten her chin. Sidney.

Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Conceys are taken either by ferrets or purse-neets. Mortimer.

2. A kind of narrow woollen tape.

To FERRET v. a. [from the noun.] To drive out of lurking places, as the ferret drives the coney.

The archbishop had ferreted him out of all his holds. Heylin.

He went in quest of Hudibras,
To find him out where'er he was;
And, if he were above ground, wou'd,
He'd ferret him, lurk where he wou'd. Burles, Hudibras.

So late as the year 1724 the Inquisition ferreted out, and drove into banishment, some considerable remnants of that unfortunate race, [persons in Spain of Moorish extraction]. Switzerland, Trav. through Spain, Lat. 30.

FERRERET n. s. [from ferret.] One that hunts another in his privacies. Sherwood.

FERRIAGE n. s. [old Fr. ferriage.] The fare paid at a ferry. Sherwood.

FERRUGINEOUS adj. [Lat. ferrugineus.] Partaking of particles and qualities of iron; a word chosen by Dr. Johnson in preference to ferruginous.

It may be made of any ferruginous matter and astringent vegetable. Johnson, Review of Huxley's Journal.

FERRUGINEOUS adj. [ferrugineus, Fr. ferrugineus, Lat.] Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretic, ferrugineous, saline, petrifying, and bituminous. Ray on the Creation.

FERRULE n. s. [virole, or verrel, old Fr. from ferrum, iron, Lat.] An iron ring put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers' ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules. Ray.

To FERRY v. a. [Japan, to pass, Sax.; Jahr, Germ.] A passage. Skinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veho. I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be sought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried? To carry over in a boat.

Cymochles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford. Spens. F. Q.

To FERRY v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.

Thence hurried back to fire,
They ferry over this Lebanese sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment. Milton, P. L.

FERRY n. s. [from the verb and FERRYBOAT.] boat.

1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.

By this title was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,
Where she was waiting, and for passage sought:
Him needed not long call, she soon to hand
Her ferry brought. Spenser, F. Q.

Bring them with imagin'd speed Unto the Traject, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

A ferryboat to carry over the king's household.
2 Sem. xix. 18.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry. Addison.

2. The passage over which the ferryboat passes.

Just above the ferry is the seat of Mr. Vernon, situated on an elevation, in the centre of this enchanting view. Weymouth's Tour.

FERRYMAN n. s. [ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I past, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman, which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that walked over the dead bodies from Memphis was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn transports raised after him. Brown.

The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd
Æneas entrance, till he knew his guide. Maccomen.

FERTH or FORTH. Common terminations, coming from the Saxon word fyrð. Gibson.

FERTILE adj. [fertile, Fr. fertilis, Lat.]

1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.

I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a Summer. Dryden.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, a thousand acres yield as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire? Locke.

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,
Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods. Blackmore.

2. With of before the thing produced.
The earth is fertile of all kind of grain. Comden, Rem.

This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground. Woodward.

FERTILENESS n. s. [from fertile.] Fruitfulness; fecundity.

He, according to the fertileness of the Italian wit, did not only afford us the demonstration of his practice, but sought to enrich our mind with the contemplation therein. W Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

To FERTILIZE v. a. [from fertilis.] To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive. Not in use.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, not excluded in many weeks after. Brown.

FERTILITY n. s. [fertilité, Fr. fertilitas, Lat.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.

I will go root away
The noxious weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereto. Religio, History.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.

To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies over their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty rivers they produce after these waters are withdrawn. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To FERTILIZE v. a. [fertilizer, Fr.] To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.

Having watered and fertilized, by their passage, the grounds through which they [rivers] seemed to wander. Dryden, Style of H. Script. p. 56.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

FERTILITY adv. [from fertile.] Fruitfully; plenteously; plentifully; abundantly. Sherwood.

FERVENCY n. s. [fervens, Lat.]

1. Heat of mind; ardour; eagerness.

Did hang a salt fish on his hook, which he
With fervecy drew up. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.

We have on all sides lost much of our first fervecy towards God. Hosker, Dedication.

There must be zeal and fervecy in him which propels for the rest their aids and supplications, which they by their joyful exclamations must ratify. Hosker.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervecy, and with perseverance. Wake, Prep. for Death.

FERVENT adj. [fervens, Lat. fervent, Fr.]

1. Hot; boiling.

The fountain's

Bubbling wave did ever freshly wash
Ne ever would depart from Summer fado.

Spenser.

From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy
Of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenitude.

Wotton.

2. Hot in temper; vehement.

They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine.

Hooder.

3. Ardent in spirit; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.

This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord. Act. xviii. 25.
So spake the fervent angel; but his zeal
None seconded, as out of season judg'd,
Or singular and rash.

Milton, P. L.

Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life.

South, Serm.

4. Ardent in love.

Will you go to him then and speak for me?

You have loved longer, and fit. Lana of Candy.

Brown.

FERVENTLY,† adv. [from fervent.]

1. In a burning degree.

It continued so fervently hot, that men roasted eggs in the sand. Halesworth Providence, p. 116.

2. Eagerly; vehemently.

Pleasure, whereunto a man is fervently moved.
St. T. Epist. Gen. fol. 162.

They all that charge did fervently apply,
With greedy malice and importune will.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. With pious ardour; with holy zeal.

Epaphras watcheth you, labouring fervently for you in prayer. Col. iv. 12.

He cares not how or what he suffers, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably.

Bay, Taylor.

FERVENTNESS, n. s. [from fervent.] Ardour; zeal.

Having great power, with constant ferventness of spirit, to declare his will.

But on the Revd. P. iii. sign. A. iii. b.

FERVID,† adj. [fervidus, Lat.]

1. Hot; burning; boiling.

The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
Earth's inmost bowels.

Milton, P. L.

2. Vehement; eager; zealous.

FERVIDITY, n. s. [from fervid.]

1. Heat.

2. Zeal; passion; ardour.

Dict.

FERVIDNESS, n. s. [from fervid.] Ardour of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, — in the account of the same, Lamb of God, it is a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of.

Beatty, Serm. vi.

FERULA,† n. s. [ferule, Fr. from ferula, giant fennel, Lat.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand; so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

The birch upon the breeches of the small ones,
And humble with the ferule the tall ones.

Beatty, and Fl. Teo Nob. Kinstern.

These differ as much as the rod and ferula.

Shew's Grammar.

FERULAR, n. s. [from ferula, Lat.] The ferule, or instrument of correction.

Phillips.

Fists, and ferulas, rods, and scourges, have been the usual distinction in schools.

Hortle, Reform. of Schools, (1682), p. 13.

FERULE, n. s. The more proper word for ferula.

Now my rhymes retail of the ferule still,
Some nose-wise pedant saith. Wp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1.

Before he had any down upon his chin, and whilst he was under the ferule.

Wp. Hall, Ren. p. 304.

From the rod or ferule I would have them free,
as from the menace of them.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

TO FERULE, v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOR, n. s. [fervor, Lat. fervor, Fr.]

1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniably truth that an effectual fervor proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Like bright Aurora, whose reluctant ray
Foretells the fervor of ensuing day.

And warns the shepherd with his locks retent
To leafy shadows, from the threatened rain.

Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervor of the day;

So from our cloud soft show'r we view,
And blasting lightning's burst away.

Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as night in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if it fervor of soul they had removed such things.

Hooder.

Happily despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervor of her love, she's flown
To her dear'd Potibunnus.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues with its present fervor.

Addition on Italy.

FESCEINNE, n. s. [from Fescennia, in Tuscany, where licentious and wanton verses were sung at weddings; Lat. Fescennini versus.] A licentious poem.

Many old poets — did write fescennines, etc.
lana, and lascivious songs.

Barton, Anat. of Med. p. 414.

FESCEINNE,† adj. [Lat. fescenninus.] Licentious; wanton.

Such a race

We pray may grace

Your fruitful spreading vine,
But dare not ask our wish in language Fescennine.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

These seldom want a company of boys and mad sparks, got together, to sing a parcel of obscene verses, which were tolerated on this occasion, [the nuptial feast.] They consisted of a kind of Fescennine rhymes.

Kennet, Rom. Antiq. li. 5.

FESCEUT, n. s. [Teut. vesken; Fr. festu.] Our own word was formerly written festu.

It is still pronounced, in some places, vesler. The original is probably the Latin festuca, a young shoot, or stalk of a tree; a small wand or stick; though Mr. Pegge strangely interprets it, by way of etymological explanation, veracue.

A small wire by which those who feared to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fence.

Holter.

Teeth them how many passions ought to move;
For one cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fences to each shining part. Dryden.

FESKLE,† n. s. [fasciula, Fr. "fascia, long pease, kidney beans." Cotgrave.] A kind of base grain.

Unhail nor frosts or poor wheat to sow,
Or cure to make Egyptian lentils thrive.

May, Vergil.

FESSE, n. s. [in heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle; if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwise, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as, the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight.

Peachment on Blazoning.

FESTAL,† adj. [old Fr. festal, from the Lat. festum.] Respecting feasts; befitting a feast.

They would have thought, who heard the strain,
They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids
Amidst the fiddling sounding shawls
To some unwearied minstrel dancing.

Collins, Ode on the Pastimes.

These were festal chacons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas evening.

Warren, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 142.

At festal seasons there may be supposed a very numerous company.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

TO FESTER,† v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corruption, Junius. Dr. Johnson accedes to this etymology. But our word may be perhaps a corruption of the Latin putula, a blain, a blister.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply fester'd within me.

Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, do not breed, behind remained still,
And festering sore, did rankle yet within.

Spenser, F. Q.

How should our festured sores be cured?

Hooder.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To bear themselves remembered.

— Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Mind that festers their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Faltoo, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect.

Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester.

South.

FESTINATE, adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, when you are going, to a most festive preparation; we are bound to the like.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FESTINATELY, adv. [from festinate.]

Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key! give enlargement to the swain;
bring him festinately hither. Shaks. I. Loh. Lak.
FESTINATION.† n. s. [festinatio, Latin.]

Haste; hurry.

Lay hands on him with all festination.

Preston, Trage of King Cambyses, (1561.)

Brown, Chr. Mor. I. 33.

FESTIVAL.† adj. [festivalis, old French; festivals, Latin.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

The king forbid that they should profane the sabbaths and festive days. 1 Mac. I. 45.

Their garlands were convivial, festive, sacrificial, honorary, funeral.

See T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

He appeared at great tables, and festive entertainments, that he might manifest his divine clarity to men. Astley.

FESTIVAL. n. s. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,

As is the night before some festive,

To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

Th' invited sisters with their guests blend
Their festivals. Sandys.

The morning trumpet festive proclaim'd
Through each high street. Milton, S. A.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
Come, celebrate this festive day!

And merrily sing and sport, and play;
'Tis Orion's nuptial day. Graville.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken festive during the festive.

Brown, on the Odyssey.

The festive of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgment to come.

Atterbury, Sermons.

FESTIVE.† adj. [festive, old Fr. festivus, Lat.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls
To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.

Thompson.

His vein was chiefly festive and satirical.
Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. I. Diss. 2.

FESTIVITE.† n. s. [festivité, old French; festivitas, Latin.]

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivite observed unto her honour. Brown.

There happening a great and solemn festivite, such as the sheep shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast.

South.

2. Gaiety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To some persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holiday. Bp. Taylor.

FESTON.† n. s. [feston, French; 'corona ex floribus texta, seu sertum festum, aut festivum, i. e. festis diebus usurpant solum.' Skinner.] An ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, and suspended from the two extremes, whence it hangs down perpendicularly. Harris.

The more flower-printer is, we see, obliged to study the form of feston. L. Shedd.

FESTUCINE. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Strawcolour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grass-hopper. Brown.

FESTUCOUS. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil. Brown, Puls. Err.

To FET.† v. a. [See to FETCH and FAR-FET.]

1. To fetch; to go and bring. Not in use.

Get home with thy fewel, make ready tofel,
The sooner the easier carriage to get.

Tusser, Husbandry.

But for he was unable then to fet,
A little boy did on him still attend. Spenser, F. Q.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoiakim, who slew him with the sword.

Jeremiah, xxvi. 23.

2. To come; to arrive at.

We hoist up mast and sail, that in a while
We fet the shore. Suckville, Induct. Mr. for Mag.

FET. n. s. [I suppose from fait, French, a part or portion.] A piece. Not in use.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a fet
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there
Was known as black at jet. Drayton.

To FETCH.† v. a. preter. fetched; anciently fet; unless it rather came from To
Fet, [precant, precant, Saxon; faita, Sw.]

Or fet th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. To derive; to draw.

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof.

Shakspeare.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off, for that outranks the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets.

Bacon, Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells, we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

At Rome, any of those arts immediately thrive under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetch'd up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sunderdon.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fet it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself. Milton, on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shows none of its beauties till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours.

Addison, Spectator.

7. To perform. It is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fet a turn about the garden, playing
The pangs of barr'd affection; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mountain. Milton, Paradise.

To come to that place they must fet a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest.

Knotley, History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing at neighing loud. Shakspeare.

The first fet a hundred and a hundred leaps
at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To perform without suddenness or violence.

She
As if she had drunk lethe, or had made
Even with Heaven, did fet so still a sleep,
So sweet and sound. Brown, and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

10. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time blew our ships, and straight we fet
The Syrian's lake; a spleenless wind so stretch'd
Her wings to wait us, and so our'd our leak.

Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself, fet this day
Travelling Fast; and with her part away
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton, P. L.

The hare laid himself down and took a nap;
says he, I can fet up the tortoise when I please. L'Estrange.

11. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fet as much as the silver in bullion. Lack.

To FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thought to fet about.

Shakspeare.

FETCH.† n. s. [precant, fraud, trick, deceit.]

A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An curious neighbour is easy to find;
If cunningness rather is seldom behind;
It's fetch is to flatter, to get what he will;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then.

Tusser.

It is a fet of wit;
You laying these slight sulles on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little witt'd i' thy working.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politics,
Straight cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqueror with a fet. Hudibras.

With this fet he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Shillingfleet.

The fox had a fet i' t.

L'Estrange.

From these instances and fetches

Thou mak'st of horses, colts, and watches,
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to me
That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FETCHER.† n. s. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

Hulot.

FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetide, French.] Stinking; rancid; having a small strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it feily hot eruptions. Arbuthnot.

Plague, fiercest kind of Nemesis divine,
Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifled Cairo's stith and field fides.

Thomson, Summer.

FETIDNESS. n.s. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n.s. [from feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pastern joint of many horses; horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.

Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yok out their armed heels at their dead masters.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore.

FETOR. n.s. [fetor, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour. Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acerb substances, and some lesser than whey. Arbuthnot on Diet.

FETTER. n.s. It is commonly used in the plural, fetters. [from feet; percepte, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet,
And like manacles on the right hand.

Ecclus. xxi. 19.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed. Relgh.

Pamson's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

The watch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release. Prior.

Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter. Addison.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom. A. Philis.

TO FETTER. v.a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to stulticate; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness. Sidney.

My conscience; thou art fetter'd more than my shanks and wrists. Shaks. Cymb.

Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakespeare.

Dath a master chide his servant because he doth not chain, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move. Mr. Brounall against Hobbes.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.

FETTERLESS. adj. [fetter and less.] Free from restraint.

Yet this affected strain gives me a tongue
As fetterless, as is an emperor's. Milton, Malcontent.

TO FETTER. † v.n. [A cant word from feet, Dr. Johnson says. This is a mistake. It is an old English word, as Mr. Malone also observes; and is yet used in the northern parts of England. "To fettle, to set or go about any thing; to dress, prepare, or put in order."

Grose. It is probably from the Saxon. Goth. fyt, studium.] To get ready; to prepare; to do business.

Nor list he now go whistling to the car,
But sell his team, and fettle to the war.

Hp. Hall, Sat. l. 6.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rang the bell. Sings, Direct. to the Footman.

TO FETTER. † v.a. To repair; to mend any thing which is broken or defective. The nearest word which occurs to me. Mr. Wilbraham says, is the old French word fature, which has exactly the same meaning as our substantive fettle; and is explained by Roquefort in his Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. by façon, mode, forme, &c. Cheshire Glossary.

FETTER. n.s. Order; good condition. See Wilbraham's Gloss. as before. It is found in the Westmoreland, Cumberland, Lancashire, and Craven Dialects also; and the compiler of the last adds, that Ascham has used it in the sense of preparation.

FETUS. n.s. [fetus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus resides in the womb. Boyle.

FEU. n.s. [Sax. feoh.] A fee, or feudal tenure. See FEUDAL.

FEU DE JOIE. [French.] A bonfire; a firing of guns on any joyful occasion.

The origin of this fire on Midsummer eve, which is still retained by so many nations, though enveloped in the mist of antiquity, is very simple: it was a feu de joy, kindled the very morning of the year began; for the first of all years, and the most ancient that we know of, began at this month of June. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FEUD. † n.s. [Sax. fæhð, enmity; from fean, to hate, or feh, a foe; Cumb. faide; low Lat. faida.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds in sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.

Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison, Cato.

FEUD. n.s. [old Fr. feude; low Lat. feudum.] A conditional allotment of land. See FEOD.

The constitution of feuds had its original from the military policy of the northern nations. Blackstone.

FEUDAL. † adj. [feudal, old Fr. feudalis, low Lat. feudalis.] pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superior lord.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of feud. Idem.
A feudal kingdom was properly the encampment of a great army; military discipline predominated, military subordination was established, and the possession of land was the pay, which the soldiers received for their personal service. Robertson, Hist. of Scotland.

The word fee in the northern languages signifies a conditional stipend or reward; and by combination with the northern adh, adial, or udal, which signifies proprietary, will be formed fee-udh, or feudum, to denote a feudal, or feudal, or proprietary property. Blackstone.

FEUDALISM. n.s. [from feudal.] The feudal system.

FEUDALITY. n.s. The state of a chief lord; feudality. Cogswear in F. Feudality.

FEUDARY. † adj. [from feud.] Holding tenure under a superior lord.

What greater dividing than by a pernicious and hostile power to disunite a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominions of England. Milton, on the Articles of Peace.

FEUDATARY. † n.s. [old Fr. feudatarius; low Lat. feudatarius.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superior.

It was hard to obtain [in the feudal times] the fact feudatary, who was the object of universal adoration. Warren, Hist. of E. P. vol. i. Diss. 1.

FEUDATORY. † adj. This word is given by Dr. Johnson as a substantive, with a citation from Bacon, in which it is an adjective, as feudatory; it is the spelling of Bacon. See FEUDATORY.

FEUDIST. n.s. [old Fr. feudiste.] One learned in the law of feuds or fees; one who writes on them.

Marquise is as much as a lord of the frontiers; although I know divers others are the decorations which the feudists have assigned.

The word is to be found in this sense, — in all the feudists. Bridges, Eng. Hist. Gloss. p. 46.

FEVER. † n.s. [French, Sax. fæcere, French; febris, Lat.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think't thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flattery and low bending?

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Should not a ling'ring fever be removed?
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?

Dryden.
He had never dream'd in his life, till he had the fever be was then newly recovered of. Lacks.

TO FEVER. v.a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever the! Shake to look on! Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind. Dryden.

FEVER-COOLING. † adj. [fever and cool.] Allaying the heat of fever.

Lay me, reclin'd,
Beneath the spreading tamarisk that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling firm.

Thomson, Summer.

FEVER-SICK. † adj. [Sax. fever-sicc.] Dis-eased with a fever.

Lie down upon thy bed,
Fighting these fever-sick.

Pede, David and Belshazzar, (1599.)

FEVER-WEAKENED. † adj. [fever and weak-en.] Debilitated by fever.

Feaver-weak'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life.

Shakespeare, A. Hen. IV. P. II.

FEVERET, n. s. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light fever, or an odd quarrel, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance.

Angl. Persegon.
FEVEREFU, n. s. peperuge, Sax. febris and fugo, Lat. A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England. Mill.

FEVERISH, adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire, And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.
When an animal that gives such turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.

Arbutus ad Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.
Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will, When all our ease must come by lying still; And for the happiness mankind can gain, Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes, Four nights the moon beheld 't' incessant fire; It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose, And further from the feverish north retire.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FEVERISHNESS, n. s. [from feverish.]

1. A slight disorder of the feverish kind. 2. Mental restlessness.

Society, perpetual disgust, and feverishness of desire, perpetually attend those, who passionately study pleasure. Ld. Shaftesbury.

FEVERISH, v. adj. [from fever.] Like a fever. Feverish heat makes no digestion.

Old Firm in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. 1652, p. 62.
FEVEROUS, adj. [feverens-se, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakespeare, Coriol.

4. Having the nature of a fever.

All feverous kinds, Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

Milton, P. L.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the physicians, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FEVEROUSLY, adv. [from feverous.] In a feverish manner.

A malady Deeply feverous, hot, or changing feverously.

Dante, Purg. p. 77.

N. Jonson, Catullus.

FEUILLAGE, n. s. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEORTIE, n. s. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemora, or filicoma.

How feuillortie How feuillortie Pale feuillortie a pure vermilion take — Fanshew, Past. Fide. p. 36.

To make a countryman understand what feuillortie signifies, it may suffice to tell him, it is the colour of withered leaves falling in autumn. Locke, Essay iii. 11. § 14.

TO FEUTER, v. a. [old Fr. feutier.] To make ready. A term of romance.

They feutered their spears. Hist. of K. Arthur, fol. s. d. sign. II. i.

He bis feutered spear. Spenser, F. Q.

FEUTERER, n. s. [Fr. vaudrier, or vaultrier, from vaulter, a kind of mongrel hound, from Lat. vaultrarius.] A dogkeeper; perhaps the cleaner of the kennel, Dr. Johnson says; but it meant one that led lime-hounds or grey-hounds for the chase. Pantulario, "who loves dogs and horses," is called a "yeoman feuterer" in B. Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour. It was also a cant term for a contemptible fellow.

Such a [favour] as you use to a brace of grey-hounds.

When they are led out of their kennels to scumber, If you will be An honest yeoman feuterer, feed us first, And walk us after. Manservant, Picture.

FEW, adj. [æn. peapa, Saxon; faa, Danish; faui, Goth. fa, Icel.]

1. Not many; not in a great number. We are left but a few of many. Jer. xlii. 2.

So much the thirst of honour fills the blood; So many would be great, so few be good; For who would virtue for herself regard, Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd. Virg.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold, Than frost diseases that infect the fold. Dryd. Purg.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more; Bond is but one, but Harper is a score. Pope, Hor.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

Though one or two of our friends are gone, since you saw your native country, there remain a few. Pope to Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a very so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkeley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but the few. Hooker.

So having said be thus to Eve in few Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton, P. L.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden, Æn.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope, Odys.

FEWEL, n. s. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire; as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater to men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils? Hooker, Doctr.

Others may give the fewel or the fire; But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley, Sermon.

TO FEWEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name, That fronts the infernal flame. Country.

FEWEL, n. s. See FUMET.

FEWNESS, n. s. [Sax. feanness.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number. How little substantial doctrine is apprehended by the fewness of good grammarians!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 50. b. According to the number of years, thou shalt diminish the price of it. Levi, xiv. 16.

These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness. Femmes and truth, 'tis thus. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FEV, v. a. [veghen, Dutch; fargia, feia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to cleanse.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field, That all a dry summer no water will yield, By feving and cutting them mud upon heaps, Commodities make the husbandman fever. Tusser.

TO FEVANCE, v. a. [fr. fancer.] To affiancé; to betroth. See TO AFFIANCE.

He hath as it were fevanc'd and betrothed to himself his church. Hornar, Transl. of Beau's Sermon. (1587.) p. 9.

Her, who is called the fevanc'd, or spouse of the bridegroom. Id. p. 303.

FIAT, n. s. [Latin, i. e. be it so, let it be done.] An order; a decree. Spenser.

For the sake of the rhyme, has once written it fiavit.

I resolve all at once the sole pleasure and fiat of our Omnipotent Creator. Bentley, Sermon. ii.

Our hands at length the unchanging fiat found, And our glad souls sprung out to meet the sound. A. Hill, The Wedding Day.

FIB, n. s. [a cant word among children; perhaps from the Latin fabula.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or soporific; in vain The creature's self at his dirty work again. Pope, Epist.

I so often lie, Scarce Harvey's self has told more fib than I. Pope.

TO FIB, v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any matter, whereby you may know when you fib, and wiser you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot.

FI'BER, n. s. [from fib.] A teller of fibs. Sherwood.

FIBRE, n. s. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.] 1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirty plants renew, And feed the fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fib, in physics, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres; others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres; and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every shudder'd fibre drops in hold.
Like nature lessing down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still.

Dryden, Span. Fiar.
FIBRIL n. s. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

FIBRILLOUS * adj. [from fibril.] Relating to the fibres.

Hence arise those uneasy sensations, pains, fibrilous spasms, &c. that hypochondriacs usually complain of.

Dr. Keener's Ess. on the Nerves, (1759), p. 14.

FIBROSUS adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrinous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greenness of moisture.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;

This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands.
The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass dried through the intestines. Arbuth. on Aliments.

FIBULA n. s. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE * adj. [iccol, Sax. Dr. Johnson says. But it is originally from the Lat. vacillo, to waver; whence the Danish vakler, the Saxon picelan, and thus our fickle.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; change-ful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,

In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride

Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Shakespeare, C. Lear.

Or likest hovering dream,

The fickle prisoners of Morpheus' train.

Milton, Il Pens.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,

Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth

Us to abolish: lest the adversary

Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God

Moot favours!

Milton, P. L.

FICKLENESS n. s. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great fortunes, nor his own advantage for her, could fether his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness.
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.

Spenyer, F. Q.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.

Addison, Frendler.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another.

Addison.

FICKLY adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of golden majesty on bankrupt terms.
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICCO * n. s. [Italian, "a flick, a flirt with one's fingers, given in disgrace; fare le fice, to bid a fig for one." Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fice to his adversaries. Caen, Surv. of Corsica.

FICTIL * adj. [fictil, Fr. fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FICTION n. s. [fictio, Lat.; fiction, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?

Sidingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.

Dryden, Dufrenoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poet's fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she, she lives in fictions.

Silvery.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Eve.

Relaph.

3. A falsehood; a lie.

FICTITIOUS * adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the case; for Daniel, nearly a century before Prior's time, uses it.

Uninform'd with fictitious fantasies,
I verify the truth.

Daniel, Ch. Wars.

With fancied rules and arbitrary laws

Matter and motion man restrains,

And studied lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.

FICTITIOUS adj. [fictitious, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

That all who view the piece may know

He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty.

Page.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopopoeia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison, Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FICTITIOUSNESS * n. s. [from fictitious.]

Feigned representation.
Some make comely a representation of mean, and others of bad men; some think that its essence consists in the unimportance, others in the fictitiousness of the transaction. Johns. Rom. No. 125.

FICTIVE * adj. [fictiv, French; fictus, Lat.] Feigned; imaginary.

Time—to those things whose grounds were very true,

Though naked yet and bare, (not having to content

The wayward curious ear,) gave fictive ornament.

Dryden, Polyth. S. 6.

FID n. s. [fida, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cordle.

Skinner.

FIDDLE n. s. [pfeil, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidelula, Latin; fiell, Erse.] A stringed instrument of music; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabouts the tune lay.

Addison, Guardian.

FIDDLE v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Thermistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.

Lucian, Esop.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senators dance.

Page.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together.

Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done.

Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE * n. s. [A cant word, reduced into the still more ridiculous expression of fid-fad in modern novels, and in nonsensical conversation.] Trifles.

Leave these fiddle-faddles.

Brown, and Fl. Wit without Money.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgich, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.

FIDDLEFADDLE adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her.

Arbutnot.

FIDDLER * n. s. [Sax. pfelepe.] A musician, one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no waxy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. B. Jonson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skillful in the trade than he was.

Bp. Taylor, Jewel of Living Holy.

These will appear such clits in story,
'Twill turn all politics to jest,

To be repeated like John Dory,
When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinners,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FIDDLERICK. n. s. [fiddle and stick.]
The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,
With which he strung his fiddlerick. Huddes.

FIDDLESTRING. n. s. [fiddle and string.]
The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlerstring, moistened with water will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.

Arbutnot on Air.

FIDUCIATION. n. s. [Lat. fiducius.]
Suretship; the act of being bound for another.

If he will be a surety, such is the nature of fiduciation and suretship, he must.

Fariside's Sermon. 1647. p. 15.

FIDELITY. n. s. [fideli, Latin; fidélité, French].

1. Honesty; veracity.
The church by public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; over the principal thing required in a witness is fidelity.

Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.
They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.

To FIDGE.† } v. n. [A cant word, Dr. To FIDGET.† } Johnson says. It seems to be a descendant of the Su. Goth.

fida, to move quickly, to be in a great hurry, or in great expectation. See To FID, v. n. To move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation, and in some parts of the north of England impatience.

Behold the grace of each dame! —
How some would dance upright as any bolt;

And some would leap and skip like a young colt;
And some would fidge, as though she had the itch.

Bretton, Works of a Young Wife, (1577.)

To fidge [is] to fiddling here and there to no manner of purpose.

Colgrave in F. Nieder.

Tim, thou'rt the Pouch to stir up trouble;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,

Put all your brother puppets out. Swift.

Our lively hostess, whose fancy was impatient of the rein, fidgeted at this, and ventured to say, Nay, this is too much. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

FIDNET. n. s. [from fidge.] Restless agitation.

Why, what can the viscousness mean?
O'erlaid the square holes in woolly fidget;

The tins are alter'd quite and clean. Gray, Long Story.

FIDNET. adj. [from fidget.] Restless; impatient. A low word, not used in serious writing.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Lat.] Confident; undoubting.

Such a fiducial persuasion as cannot deceive us. Fr. Halli, Rem. p. 366.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it offers fiducial reliance on the promises, and obedient submission to the commands.

Hemmond, Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIALLY. adv. [from fiducial.] Undoubtingly; confidently.

It is the Spirit of God alone, that proposes to the soul the grounds of hope, and then by an immediate and Almighty power enables the soul fiducially to close with and rest upon that object, upon those grounds. South, Sermon vi. 472.

FIDUCIARY. n. s. [fiduciarus, Latin].

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciar, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it. Hemmond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in a fiduciar sentiment to whatever the Gospel has revealed.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely on where upon mere love and fiduciar obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Hewell.

The fiduciar or letters of credence of the churches. Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Usur. B. 3.

3. Held in trust.

Every herself must pronounce that return of his for so acquitting of his fiduciar pledges, to be a most noble act. Hewell, Lett. ii. 61.

The High Admiral himself cannot grant it for longer than his own time, being but a trust and fiduciar power. Symonds.

FIE. interj. See Fr. A word of blame or indignation.

FIEF. n. s. [feif, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superior.

To the next realm she stretch'd her way,
For pasture near adjoining lay;

A plentiful province and alluring prey;
A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,

And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd. Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbutnot on China.

FIELD.† n. s. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited, not built on.

Every plant of the field, before it was in the earth. Gen. ii. 5.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasure prove,

That hills and valleys, dale and field,
And all the craggy mountains yield.

Raleigh.

By the civil law the corpses of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the felds.

Ayliffe, Purgation.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Feld lands are not exempted from mowdown, nor yet from snat, where it is more than to enclosed lands. Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground. Mr. Horne Tooke, in the margin of this copy of the dictionary, writes, "where trees have been felled, and therefore fit for cultivation;" and, in his Divisions of Purley, says, "feld-land is opposed to woodland, meaning land where the trees have been felled."

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain
In Plinian fields to sow the golden grain. Pope, Rotaia.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed. Shaks. Macbeth.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it. Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals. Shaks. Hen. VI.

What though the field be lost,
All's not lost. Milton, P. L.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;
Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

Ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes himself in human nature. Addison, Spect.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace. Bp. Swinburne.

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Gales all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and adore. Blackmore, Creation.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well suited with colour. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

Slight were his arms, a sword, a silver shield,
No marks of honour charg'd its empty field. Dryden, Z. n.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work;
That we with smoking swords may march from hence,
To help our fielded friends. Shakespeare, Coriol.

FIELD-BASIL. n. s. [field and basil.] A plant.

FIELDED. n. s. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good night; I'll to my trucklebed,
This fielded is too cold for me to sleep. Shaks.

FIELDFARE. n. s. [feld and papan, to wander in the fields; turdus pilaris.] A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold Winters. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIELDMARSHAL.† n. s. [field and marshal.] Commander of an army in a field; commander of the whole army, whether in the field or not; the officer of highest military rank in England.

FIELD-MOUSE. n. s. [field and mouse; nitedula.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground. Dryden.

Fieldmice are apt to gnaw their roots, and kill them in hard winters. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FIELDOFFICER. n. s. [field and officer.] An officer whose command in the field extends to a whole regiment; as the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major.

FIELDPICCE. adj. [field and picce.] Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges.

The bones planting his feldpreachers upon the hills, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants.

Knollys.

FIELD-PREACHER.* n. s. [field and preacher.] One who preaches in a field or open place.

Do you think the popish field preachers did not first learn their lesson, cook no previous texts, made no provision, before they set out upon their expeditions? Read their legends, and be convinced.

Bp. Livingston to Mr. Whitfield, Enthusiasm of Methodists, &c. vol. I. P. 2. Pref. p. viii.

FIELD-PREACHING.* n. s. The act of pronouncing an harangue in a field or open place.

The fact you own, both of popish and methodical field-preaching; you glory in it.

Bp. Livingston to Whitfield, &c. Pref. p. ix. The judgements of this new apostle [Mr. Wesley] fall only on the members of his own church, for opposing the tumults of field-preaching, and the frocks of what he calls the new birth.

Warburton, Doct. of Grace.

FIELDBROOM.* n. s. [field and room.] Unobstructed room; open space.

Falling back where they Might feldbroom find at large.

The fiend is coming down to you, and hath great wrath.

Wicliffe, Revel. xiii. 17.

Tom is followed by the foul fiend. Shak. L. Lear.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could, coming from hell; what fiends would wish should be.

And Hannibal could not have wish'd to see.

R. Jonson, Cithere.

The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,

Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food;

The fiend remains his courier.

Drayton, Theod. and Honoria.

O woman! woman! in that ill thy mind Is bent, all hell contains no fouler fiend.

Pope, Odyssey.

FINDFUL.* adj. [find and full.] Full of evil or devilish practices.

Regard his hellish fall.

Whom findful fortune may exhort the wise

Only to wonder at unlawful things.

Milford, Truce. Hist. of Dr. Faustus.

FINDBLIKE.* adj. [find and like.] Resembling a fiend; savage; cruel; extremely wicked.

The cruel ministers

Of this dread butcher, and his findlike queen.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FIGURATIVE. adj. [from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; whosoever Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious extimations should rather cease.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.

How often have we been misled at understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.

Stillingfleet.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical extimations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublime and with the most figurate expressions.

Dryden, Ser. Pref.

FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]

By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself in the first person, what belongs to others.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Utah and Eschias.

Brown.
Satire is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprobated, partly dramatically, partly simply; but for the most part figuratively and occasionally.

Dryden, Juv. Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks, and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borages, buglans, which have four leaves.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Men find greco clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.

Begh.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies, for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be; whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued.

2. Shape; form; semblance.
The carpenter—maketh it after the figure of a man.

Isaiah, liii, 15.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion.

Shakspeare.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.

Richardson, Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favoured, while his arms support The cause, and rul'd the councils of the court, I made some figure there; nor was my name Obscure, nor I without my share of fame.

Dryden, Æn.
The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country.

Addison, Spect.
Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.

Addison, Guardian.

Whether or not they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness.

Addison.
Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people.

Addison, Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.
If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that be may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and burry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow.

Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figure of a picture the painter is to employ the show of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work.

Dryden, Dryden.

My favourite books and pictures sell; Kindly throw to a little figure.

Prior.
8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question.

Watts, Logic.

9. A character denoting a number.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.
Who is the figure of him that was to come.

Romans, v. 14.
12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking, in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pl'd hyperbolos, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer lies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to lentow must be understood only praying to pray.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [figuro, Latin.]

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite n'er with burning meteors.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very and first which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Continuing the nature of the times deceased.

Marring rings are not of this stuff:
Oh why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the scientists.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.

7. To prefigure; to foreshew.

Three glorious sins, each one a perfect sin,
In this the heaven figures some event.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen.

- To FIGURE* v. n. To make a figure.

Who figured in the rebellion.

- FIGUR'G** n. s. [pepente, Sax. figura, Lat.] A plant.

- FIL'ICIOUS*. adj. [from filum, Latin.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filicous matter common, and sometimes the down that growth above.

- FIL'ICIOUS*. n. s. [filasarius, low Lat., filum, Lat.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those who writs whereon he makes process.

There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt.

- FILAMENT*. n. s. [filament, French; filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvia passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments.

- The ever-tolling orb's insipid myrrour
On the next threadly and filamentous door bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air,
And those still strike the next, till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light.

The dung of burras is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible.

- FILAMENTOUS** adj. [from filament.] Like a slender thread.

The doctrine of the filamentous extract will become as familiar as any hypothetical theory among us, only by supposing this, like all other membranes, thickened and become opacous by disorders.

- FIL'ANDER** See FELANDERS.

- FIL'BERT** n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beard, or hanks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymological account of this word. Gower gives us a very different one in the following lines; which Mr. Horne Tooke also has agreed with me in noticing:

"With that upon a grene bough
"A seynt of sylke, which she [Philis] there had,

"She knit; and so herself she lad,
"That she about her white swere
"It did, and henge herselfe there.

"Whereof the goddes were amoved,
"And Demophon was reproved,
"That of the goddes' providence
"Was shape such an evidence

"Ever afterwaie ayen the slowe,
"That Philis in the same throve
"Was shapen into a nutte tree;
"That all men it might see;

"And after Philis FILIBERT
"This tree was cleped in the yerd:
"And yet, for Demophon to shame,
"Unto this day it beareth the name."

Confess. Amantii, B. 4.
The filbert is said to have been brought from Pontus. Hulot calls it "Pantion nut." A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, mulberries, monkshoods of all colours.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else shouldst thy wits of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert, I have often known
Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone.

There is also another kind called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former; the best are those of a thin shell.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pilage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen.

The champion robbed by night,
And proweith and filcheth by day.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which neither enriches him,
And makes me the poor indeed.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones.

What made these venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away?

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.

Pain would they filch that little food away.
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey.
Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's collar cure.
Gay, Tristram.

FIL'CHER.† n. s. [from filch.] A thief;
a petty robber.
This filcher of affections.
Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

FIL'CHINGLY.* adv. [from the part. filch-.]
In a thievish manner. Sherwood.

FILE.† n. s. [file, Fr. filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. A thread. Not now used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Watson.
Dorothea did not interrupt the file of her history.
Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 1.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject-matters. Bacon.

The apothecary-train is wholly blind;
From files a random recipe they take;
And many deaths of one prescription make.
Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file.
To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The val'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of a war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare, Ant. & Cleop.
So saying, on he led his radiant file. Bacon.

5. [reol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made;
the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made.

Mazon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.
1. Saw. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfrays ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side.
Dryden.

6. Style; manner of writing. A Latinitism.
Not now in use.

And were it not ill fitting for this file
To sing of hills and woods 'mongst wars and lightnings,
I would abate the sterrenesse of my stile.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. st. 37.

FIL'LCUTTER. n. s. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steele is a tough sort of steel: filcutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Mason.

TO FILE.† v. a. [filer, Fr. from filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire.
Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

Thou dost file
One lie upon another well.

Twelfth Night, P. 174.
From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot & Page, Merit. Scrib.

2. [from feolan, Sax.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Locke.

The eminent court—gives their tongues Sweetness of language; makes them apt to please;
Files off all rudeness, and uncivil behaviour.

Beaumont and Fl. Nob. Gentlemen.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blennish by *fil*ing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Rays.

3. To smooth; to polish. This use of the word was formerly frequent, as applied to the tongue; and denoted polished speech. It is a Gallicism, 'Avoir la langue bien afilée.' Dr. Johnson cites only the example of Shakespeare, without any remark. Gower, Chaucer, and Skelton, afford abundant instances of this usage. Spenser, of course, adopts it;
and Dryden thought it worth his notice.

For that old man of pleasing words had store,
And well could file his tongue as smooth as glass.

Spenser, F. Q. i. l. 1. 23.
These hath flourished in England so fine and *fil*d phrases, and so good and pleasant poets, as may countervayle the doings of Virgil, Ovid, &c.

Gower, Egloges, Epiques, &c. (1503), Pref.
His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory,
his tongue *fil*led, and his eye ambitious.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.
His mien be fashion'd, and his tongue be fil'd.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

4. [from arylan, Saxon.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland. See Foul.

The even is theirs, let others thresh,
Their hands they may not file.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.
She slightly lept out of her *fil*d bed.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. l. 62.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.
Shakespeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman, Hinds.

TO FILE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony,
till we drew up in good order, and fil'd off.
Trotter.

Did all the greater stoms at the call
Of chance file off to form the peditious ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall?

Blackmore, Creation.
2. To rank with; to be strung, as it were, upon the same thread or wire.

Thence, I take it,
Although she love you well—
Must needs, and reason for it, be examin'd,
And by her modesty; and fear'd too tight too,
To file with her affections; You have lost her.

Beaumont and Fl. Mon. Thomas.

FIL'EMOT. n. s. [corrupted from feuille
mort, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filé, turn'd up with red.

Swift, Direct. for Scrivners.
FIL'ER.† n. s. [from file.] One who files;
one who uses the file in cutting metals.

Sherwood.
FIL'IAL. adj. [filial, filiale, Fr. filius,
Lat.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.
My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

Milton, P. L.
He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial Godhead answering spoke.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent nose decays and dries,
With a resembling face the daughter looks arise.

Milton, P. L.

FILIA'TION.† n. s. [filiation, French; from filius, Lat.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal.

Hale, Orig. of Manich.

Among all the sons of God, there is none like to that One Son of God. And if there be so great a disparity in the filiation, we must make as great a difference in the correspondent relation.

Præson on the Creed, Art. I.

FIL'IBEL.* See FILIBEL.

FIL'IGRANE, or FIL'IGREE.* adj. [Latin,
filum, a thread, and granum, grain.]

Denoting work curiously wrought, in the manner of little threads or grains, usually in gold and silver; a kind of wire-work. In the Pop's Dictionary,

1690, filigrainé, or filigrain'd, is defined as denoting "dressing-boxes, baskets, or whatever else is made of silver wire-work." But the word is older in our language.

A curious filigrane handkerchief, and two fair
filigrane plates brought out of Spain.

Dr. Brown's Travels, 1685, p. 147.

Adam and Eve in humble-work, without fig-leaves, upon canvas, curiously wrought with her ladyship's own hand; several filigrane curiosities.

Trotter, No. 245.

The churches of our ancestors shoot up into spires, towers, pinacles, and filigrane work.

Scudamore, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

FIL'INGS.† n. s. [from file.] without a singular. Dr. Johnson says: yet our lexicography presents the singular: "A *fil*ing, limeure, Fr." Sherwood, which Cotgrave renders "file-dust, also a *fil*ing." Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will,
with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperore. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Filices on the Classics.

To FILL. v. a. [fillan, Sax.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.
Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim. St. John, li. 7.

I am who fill

Infinite, our vacuous space. Milton, P. L.
The celestial quinquies, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and about

The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To store abundantly.
Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton, P. L.

3. To satisfy; to content.
He with his consort Eva
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep love to learn. Milt. P. L.
Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings.
Chrys., Phil. Prince.

4. To glut; to surfeit.
Thou art seeing meat, fill Timon's feast.
— Ay, to see meat, fill knives, and wine heat fools. Shakspeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To expend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness so looms about,
That he waxes majesty in fill then out. Dryden.
7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leaps from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and uncoils'd;
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.
When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the under-work of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.
There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.
Is far you ride?
— As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To FILL. v. a.

1. To give to drink.
In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her doubtless. Rev. vii. 6.
We fill to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shakspeare.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.
Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.
Neither the Filly-Moor nor the Exsine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

FILL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye thereof her babes might suck their fill. Spenser, P. Q.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock,
and waters flowed to your fill? 2 Esdr. i. 30.
Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happens this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton, P. L.

Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting no night, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spard not. Milton, P. L.

Which made me gently first remove your fairs,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham, Sophy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.
This mule being put in the fill of a cart, ran away with the cart and timber. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FILLER.† n. s. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.
'Tis a more filler, to stop a vacancy in the barometer, and construct the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.
They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. One who stores abundantly.
Brave adder yield; thou stock of arms and honest. Shakspeare.

Thou filler of the world with fame and glory. Bacon, and Fl. Bonducus.

FILLET. n. s. [filet, French; filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.
His hateful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling venom folds her hairs. Dryden, Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope, Winter Forest.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to wood.
The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp brothers rank'd, the roast they turn'd;
Those morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillers for the feast. Dryden, King.

3. Meat rolled together; and tied round.
Fillet of a fenny snake.
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Ex. xxvii. 10.

To FILL'ET.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
They wear their hair long and filleted. T. Herbert, Trav. p. 376.

2. To adorn with an astragal.
He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

FILLIBEG.† n. s. [Gael, fillleadh-beg, i. e. fillleadh, a plait or cloth, and beg, little.] Literally, a little plaid; a dress, reaching only to the knees, worn by men in the Highlands of Scotland instead of breeches.

The fillbeg, or lower garment, is still very common, and the bonnet almost universal. Johnson, Journey to the West Islands.

FILLING.† n. s. [from fill.]

1. Supply.
And why that spiteful character given to all crowds? mere fillings of his own, without warrant from his original. Beaumont, Phil. Laps. § 54.

2. The act of growing full.
The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called filling, the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrisation. Sharp, Surgery.

To FILLIP.† v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered. This is Dr. Johnson's opinion; but the word may be a corruption of the Latin aleps, a blow, a stroke.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.

We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or triple. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FILLIP.† n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.
Man's life is as a glass, and a filly may crack it. Trog. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599).

A gentleman,
If I, that so much love him, may commend him,
Of free and virtuous parts; and one, if I may
Should fall upon us, for which fear I brought him,
Will not fly back for filly. Bacon, and Fl. The Chances.

The dead epicure cannot but subscribe to the truth of Sardanapalus's tomb, which I find no tried to have a hand in a posture of filipping, reaching out of the tomb; and the motto, "Omnia nec tanti," all is not worth a filly. Whitlock, Memo. of the Eng. p. 349.

FIL'LY.† n. s. [fillog, Welsh, a young mare, also a wanton girl; fillog, Celt. filia, the fem. of fil, a colt, Ireland.]

1. A young mare; opposed to a colt or young horse.
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakspeare.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A wanton girl; a flirt.
A skittish filly will be your fortune, Welford, Bacon, and Fl. Scornful Lady.

I am joined in wedlock, for my aim, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison, Spect.

FILM. n. s. [film, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the surgeon needs did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the catarrh, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the filus remove'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton, P. L.

A stone is held up by the filus of the bladder,
and so kept from grating or offending it.

Ground, Bills of Mortality.
There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, faculty, or cognition, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies.

He from thin filus shall purge the visual ray,
And on the slightest eyeballs pour the day.

Pope, Messiah.
To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will tut skin and filus the ulcerous place,
Whilst rust corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

It is thine ignorant and gross infidelity that hath lined up thine eyes, that thou canst discern no spiritual object. By. Hrd.' Rem. p. 251.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

He showed me a little excrecence that he hath beginning upon the uttermost ball of his eyes, a filmy matter, like the rudiment of a pin and web as they call it.

Dr. H. Watson, Lett. (1628), Rem. p. 441.
So the false spider, when her webs are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;

And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toll
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, till death
Brenes them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disperses in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew, Microsc.

FIL'LER. n. s. [filtru, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. s. [filth, Sax. fyta, Icel. Wic-liffe writes filth-hæc for the state of being defiled, Apoec. 13.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth savour but themselves. Shakespeare, C. Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Shakspeare.

Though perishes among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sapience,
To spare the folks that give him pain. South.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHY. adj. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

If she do not paint, she will look so filthy,
thou canst not love her!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 572.
It stuck filthy in the camel's stomach that buttermilk, and the like, should be served, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]
1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue supposed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
And their own mother loath'd their baseness,
And gave abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native sin.

Spenser, F. Q.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable.

Smith, Sermons.
FILT'RY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover between the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden, Discourse.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtru.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

Extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and these ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.
FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind.

Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into chrysalis, we put four ounces of it in purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s. [corrupted from femula.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp.

Mortimer.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;

And afterwards trim it, to serve as a need,
The fimble to spin and the carle for her seed. Tasso.

To FIMBRIATE. v. a. [Lat. fimbriatus.] To fringe; to hem. Fimbriated is still an heraldic term for bordered.

Besides the divers tricking or dressing [heraldic] crosses; as piercing, voiding, fimbriating, &c. innumerable that crosses alone, as they are variously disguised, are enough to distinguish all the several families of gentlemen in England.

Fulter, Holy War, p. 271.
FIN. n. s. [fin, Sax. vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fin of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare, Othello.

Their fin consist of a number of graily bones, long and slender, like pins and needles.

More against Athanasius.
Thus at half-eat a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;

The wary herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fin awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his ear 'd' industrious long plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. And. Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like stapides, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, as geese and geese, according to the method of nature in latrinosus or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fin or oars upon their feet.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable.

FINAL. adj. [final, French, finalis, Lat.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant Death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft inrook'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton, P. L.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where one fight has been final to the war. Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Darwin on Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his fin smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them.

Hesher.
By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, alphins, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

FINALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Lastly, here's'd
May chance to number three with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton, S. A.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only.

Darwin on Ireland.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sin to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE. n. s. [French.] With the accent on the second syllable; though Dr. Johnson places it on the first. It may be curious to observe, that we formerly used the word finance in the sense of an end; and that, in the en-

2. One that picks up any thing lost.
Some lewd speaking cryer,
May call the finder's conscience, if they meet.

Dante.

O yes! If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged reward.

Crahan.

3. A discoverer: an inventor.
I curse the fiddling finders out of music.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

FINDFA'ULT.† n. s. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, shows the mouth of all findfauls.

Shakespeare.

Italers, grudgeurs, persecutors, findfauls.

Trans. of Biscaini, (1626.) p. 42.

FINDFA'ULTING.* adj. [from findfault.]
Cavilling; captious.

She doth not set business back by inquiet
brangings and findfaulter quarrels.

Whitlock, Memo. of the Eng. p. 247.

FINDING.* n. s. [from find.]
1. Discovery by study.

The finding out of parabolas is a wearisome labour of the mind.

Ecclesi. xii. 26.

2. Discovery by chance.
Go you the next way by your findings.

Shakespeare, Win. Tole.

3. In law, the return made by the jury to the bill of indictment.

WINDY. adj. [from wind, Saxon.] Plump; proud; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the Proverb,

A cold May and a windy,
Makes the barn fat and findy;

means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain.

Junius.

FINE.† adj. [fine, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin. Serenius notices the Iceland, finnar, beautiful, polished.]

1. Not coarse.
Not any skill'd in loops of finning fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare.

Spenser.

He was array'd in purple and fine linen.

St. Luke, xvi. 19.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.
Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

Ezek. viii. 27.

3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

This is a pleasant cite —
The ayre subtil and fine.

Petrarch, of Damon and Patience.

When the eye stands in the fine medium, and the object in the grosser things less greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the fine.

Beacon.

4. Refined; Subtly excogitated.
To substance he promised himself, money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate and succeed in all parts.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine.

Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.
Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the fine edges or points of wit.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,
Or call up the master.

D. Johnson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.
Are they not senseless then, that think the soul
Nought but a fine perfection of the sense. Durier.

The troops of places are set fine or rank; they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the place, that in working they take off a thin shaving.

Morum, Meck. Esch.

8. Artful; dexterous.
The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine delivery, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded counsel to keep them aloof.

Beacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.
Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,
He all those royal signs had stol'n away.

Shakespeare, Tit. L.

Thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore,
stand aside.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.
To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine.

Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.
Guides has been rather too lavish in bestowing this beauty upon almost all his fine women.

Spence.

12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.
He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars.

Fulton on the Classics.

13. Showy; splendid.
It is a fine genius as with a fine fashion;
all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it.

Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy.

Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses.

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse;
A fine exchange for liberty.

Philips, Britain.

15. Taper; slender.
Like a crane, his neck was long and fine.

Spenser, F. G. l. vi. 21.

They gather'd flowers to fill their finest,
And with fine fingers crott full feastedly
The tender stalks.

Spenser, Proclamation.

Her cheeks all white-red —
And such fine fingers.

A. Fraunce, Countess of Pemb. Inychurch, (1591.)
sign G. 4.

No longer shall the bodice aptly laid
From thy full bosom to thy slender waste
That she and hermony of shape extreme,
fine by degrees and beautifully less.

Prior.

FINE. n. s. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.
The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an erick.

Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.
E'en this ill night your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery.

Shakspeare, C. John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure secured out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of vanity, attempt us again.

Shakespeare.

Besides fine set upon plays, games, balls, and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity.

Addison.

How vain that second life in others breeds,
The estate which wins inherits after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must require,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope

4. [from finis, Latin; fin, finis, French.]
The end; conclusion. It is now seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zeinane, the powers of his spirit depending of love.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly ordered, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other.

Hooker.

Still the fine is the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakspeare.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this fine; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chasteably absent.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest;
The next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him, nor
With sores and sicknesses beleaguers round.

Dryden, Juc.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece.

Dryden.

TO FINE. v. a. [from fin, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.
The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not
in use.

Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,
To fine his title with some new laws of state,
Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Lingere.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

3. To make less coarse.
It fines the grain, but makes it short, though thick.

Mortimer.

4. To make transparent.
It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. [From the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard.

6. TO FINE. v. n. To pay a fine.
What poet ever fin'd for sherrif? or who
By rhymes and verses did ever lord mayor grow?

Oldham.

TO FINEDRAW. v. a. [fine and draw.]
To saw a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINEDRAWER. n. s. [from finedraw.] One whose business is to saw up rents.

FINEFA'NGERED. adj. [fine and finger.]
Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most finefinger'd workman on the ground,
Archery, by his means was vanquished.

FINE'LY.† adv. [from fine.]
1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.

Speech finely framed delighted the ears of them that read the story.

Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked.

Addison, on Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.
Get you black lead, sharpened finely.
Proverbs on Drawing.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.
He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand only, finely attired in white.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtly; not grossly.
Saltpeere was but grossly beaten: for it should not be finely powdered.
Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.
Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time.
South.

- For him she loves:
She nam'd not me; that may be Torismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare.
Dryden, Sp. Frier.

6. Subtly; artfully.
We may not use this one secret, as it was finely carried, at 4000, in present money.
Watson, Paroli, D. of Buck, and E. of Essex.

7. In a great degree; completely; purely.
As that word is sometimes used, finely, as an adjective is thus common in Cumberland, where a man in good health being asked how he is, answers "he is finely."

- My wife was finely well to day.
Diary of H. Earl of Clarendon, (1689), §. 365.

- FIN'LESS.* adj. [fine and less.] Unbounded; endless.
Poor and content is rich, and rich enough;
But riches finless is no peace as water,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.
Shakespeare, Othello.

- FIN'NESS.* n. s. [from fine.] 1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.
Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight.
Sidney.

- As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days.
Tenip.

- The softness of her wit, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character.
Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.
The fineness of clothes destroys the ease; it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any; the body may languish under the most splendid cover.
Decay of Poetry.

- The fineness of the colours, and richness of the stuff.
Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 72.

3. Subtly; artfulness; ingenuity.
Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution
Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

- It [the Directory] should have been composed with so much artifice and fineness, that it might have been to all the world an argument of their learning and excellency of spirit; if not of the goodness and integrity of their religion and purposes.
Mr. Taylor, on Extensive Prayer.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.
Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find persusive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love.
Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

- I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height; but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no further.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigency they have diminished both the weight and fineness.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. Smoothness; not coarseness.
Needwood—
Of Britain's forests all —
For fineness of her turf supassing.
Dryden, Polyol. S. 12.

FIN'ER.* n. s. [from fine.] One who pursues metals.
Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer.
Prov. xxiv. 4.

FIN'ERY.* n. s. [from fine.] 1. Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.
Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival.
South.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together.
Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospect, or the most various scenes of sensible things.
Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for.
Law.

2. The name of a forge at iron-works.
FIN'ERY.* adj. [fine and spoken.] Using a number of fine phrases. The word may be considered perhaps as ironical rather than serious.

Be cautiously upon your guard against the infinite number of dressed and finery spoken "cavaliers d'industrie."
Ld. Chesterfield.

FIN'ESPE.* adj. [fine and spun.] Ingeniously contrived; artfully invented.
That mixture in the art of making
The fineness lies, that sells so dear
False words, false hopes, Fineness, Fin. Ed. p. 68.
Have they not led us deep in the disclosure
Of Fineness nature, exquisitely small?

Men — who did not amuse their readers with empty declarations and fineness theories of toleration, while they themselves were agitated with a furious insubstantial spirit.
Leach, Lett. to Warburton, p. 65.

FIN'ESSE.* n. s. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some fineness.
Hayward.

FIN'GER.* n. s. [Anglo-Saxon; finger; Goth. finger, Icel. from faenga, to seize, to hold, Fennian, Sax. fangen, Germ. fangen, i. e. fangens, seizers, holders.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.
The finers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger.
Quincy.

You seem to understand me.
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skiny lips.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Disgraces, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger 't' thy eye and sob,
Because 't' had no'er another tub.
Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four finers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity.
Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of finers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one sound a particular note.
Kil against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, till her finers were sore.
Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.
Go now, go trust the wind's ancerant breath,
Remove'd four finers from approaching death,
Or seven at most, when thickest it is hoard.
Dryden, Juv.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three finers thick.
Wilson, Math. Magic.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

This softness from thy finger took.
Walker.

To FIN'GER.* v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To touch lightly; to toy with.
Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be finers them to anger me. Shaks.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievery.
Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them; had my desire;
Finers 't' their packs; and, in a fit, withdrew
To mine own room again; making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

You would fain be finers
This old sin-offering of two hundred, Tranio.
Bacon, and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

His ambition would needs be finers the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne.
South, Seren.

3. To touch an instrument of music.
You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who, finers 't' to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken.
Shakespeare, Pericles.

4. To handle without effort or violence.
Who touched me? 'neath our Saviour, when the bloodily-dressed woman finers 't' the hem of his garment.
Bp. Hall, Rev. p. 90.

5. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers. See FIN'GERS.

FIN'GERBOARD.* n. s. The board at the neck of a fiddle, guitar, or the like, where the fingers operate on the strings.
Mell, though he played far sweeter than Balsar, yet Balsar's hand was more quick, and could run it insensibly to the end of the fingerboard.
Life of A. Wood, p. 108.

FIN'GERED.* adj. [from finger.] Having fingers, digitate.
Hallist.

Fingered and thumbed. Skelton Parva, p. 124.

FIN'GERERN.* n. s. [finger and fern; as plenum, Lat.] A plant.

FIN'GERING.* n. s. [from finger.] 1. The act of touching lightly, of toying with.
One that is covetous, is not so highly pleased with the mere sight and finers of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man.
Grave, Comed. Scen.

2. The manner of touching an instrument of music.
Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my finers,
I must begin with rudiments of art.
Shakespeare, Tem. of Sherr.

She hath broke the lute —
I did tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her finers.
Shakespeare, Tem. of Sherr.

3. Work exquisitely performed with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this too curious net-work might compare.

Spenner.

FIN'ORSTONE. n. s. [finger and stone; telesticus, Lat.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

FIN'GLEFANGLE. n. s. [from fangle.] A trifle; a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle.

About the slightest fanglefangle.

Hudibras.

FIN'ICAL. adj. [from finic.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorion, glassgazing, superserviceable, finical rogue. Shakespeare, A. Lear.
I cannot bear a finical poor remanence, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. T. Extrange.

FIN'ICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FIN'ICALNESS. n. s. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

It is for such little virtues as the preacher of Lincoln's Inn to hide their leanness by the finicalness of culture.

Warburton to Harad, Lett. 50, note.

To FIN'ISH. v. a. [finir, French; finis, Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower, stieeth not down first and counselleth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

St. Luke, xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grave. 2 Cor. viii. 6.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Brownie on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find, Yet is it all that Eternal Will design'd; It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind.

Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finish'd as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest.

Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FIN'ISH. n. s. [from fin.] A word sometimes used by artists, meaning the last touch or polish of the composition. See FINISHING.

FIN'ISHER. n. s. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher, Oft does them with the weakest minister. Shakspeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher Of utmost hope! Milton, P. L.

Salust arose to give it [the Roman history] the last finishing of art and genius. Warburton on Prodiges, p. 73.

FIN'ITE. adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinity.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited to two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Hentley.

FIN'ITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FIN'ITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us. Building fleet.

FIN'ITENESS. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unlay the current of my passion, and leave without other boundary than what is set by the force of my natural powers. Norris.

FIN'ITUDE. n. s. [from finit.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

This is hardly an authorized word.

Finite, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FIN'ICLE. n. s. [feniculum, Lat. fenicelle, Teut.] Fennel. Craven Dial. It is used in other parts of the north.

FIN'LESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me

With telling of the millwarp and the ant, And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FIN'LIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern And untam'd Indians, on the stream did glide; Ere sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn, Or finlike ears did spread from either side. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FIN'NED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mortimer.

FIN'PLE. n. s. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fipple that straitens the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIR. n. s. [Jyrr, Welsh; puph, Saxon; Jyrr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green; the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 Kings, vi. 15.

The aspiring fir and stately box. Pope.

FIR-TREE. n. s. The tree called fir.

The fir-tree rejoices at, and the cedars of Lebanon. Isaiah, xiv.

FIRE. n. s. [Jyrr, Saxon; fewr, German; Jyrr, Icel. and Su. "Vox antiquissima Scytho-Pirgryca." Serenius.

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky; Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire. Dryd.

2. Anything burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out, Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Where two raging fires meet together, They do consume the thing that feeds their fire. Shakespeare.

So contraries on Aëta's top conspire; Here hourly frosts, and by them breaks out fire.

Shakespeare.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries. There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies, Conceal'd in chests from human eyes, A fire may come, and it may be Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars, hide your fires!

Let not night see my black and dead desires! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Sadrach's soul my glowing breast inspire, To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. xxxiii. 14.

7. Anything provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true? Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakespeare.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and upon provocations, might sting a phrase. Atterbury.

One of my companions was a scholar with fire; and the other a soldier of the same complexion. My learned man would fall into disputes, and argue without any manner of provocation or contradiction. The other was decisive without words, and would give a shrug or an oath to express his opinion.
Tatler, No. 61.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head.
Quench or allay the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them.
Eaton on the Classics.

He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire.
Blackmore.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire.
Page.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critic with a poet's fire.
Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meaneast of your sons inspire.
Page.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It sits in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns.
The god of love retire;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And new's swift wing shall fan the fire.
Mallet's Fables.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

12. To set FIRE on, or set on FIRE. To kindle; to inflame.

Hermosilla courageously set upon the horse-men, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turk's horses stood.
He that set a fire on a piano-tre to spite his neighbour, and the piano-tre set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all arise from his own ill intention.
Jpn. Taylor, Rules of Living Holy.

13. To set a FIRE. To inflame.

So inflame'd by my desire,
It may set her heart on fire.
Carver.

14. A fellow of FIRE. A term, in Queen Anne's time, for the modern buck or blood; the latter of which Dr. Johnson defines "a man of fire," See BLOOD.

You see, in the very air of a fellow of fire, something so expressive of what he would be at, that, if it were not for self-preservation, a man would laugh out.
Tatler, No. 61.

To FIRE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set on fire; to kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they intended not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain.
Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile.
A second FURY, differing but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame.
Dryden, Sen.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of power,
A thousand princess, with a crown in drow,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right.
Dryden.

FIRESTICK. n. s. [fire and stick.] A lighted stick or brand.

Children, when they play with firesticks, move and whirl them round so fast, that the motion will cover their eyes, and represent an entire circle of fire to them. Digby on Boddies.

FIRESTONE. n. s. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallic fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallic earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name from being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hist. Mat. Med.
Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold loads, must be of advantage. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Mortimer.

TO FIRK. v. a. [from ferio, Latin.]
1. To whip; to beat; to correct; to chastise. This word is now rarely used in any sense. Formerly it was variously used, and sometimes very licentiously.

I'll firk him and ferret him, Shaks. K. Hen. V.

Besides, it is not only foppish,
flut style, idolatrous and popish,
For one man out of his own skin
To firk and whip another's sin.

Hudibras.

2. To drive.
Hades thou my business, thou could'st firk us so;
'Twould firk thee into air a thousand mile.

Middleton's Wick.

FIRK. n. s. [from the verb.] A stroke.
Written also ferk; but rarely used.

This is a pretty juvenile firk of wit for a grave ancient divine to use.

shop, that it will cost us many a firk of strong beer to bring them back again.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. A small vessel.

You heard of that wonder of the lightning and thunder;

Which made the lye so much the louder;
Now list to another, that miracle's brother;
Which was done with a firk of powder.

Denham.

FIRM. adj. [firmitas, Latin.]

1. Strong; not easily pierced or shaken; hard, opposed to soft.

The flakes of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves, and they cannot be moved.

Job, xli. 23.

Love's artillery then checks

The breastworks of the firmest sex. Cleveland.
There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought to be filled with rubbish. Dryden.

That body, whose parts are most firm in themselves, and are by their peculiar shapes capable of the greatest contacts, is the most firm; and that which has parts very small, and capable of the least contact, will be most soft. Woodward.

2. Constant; steady; resolute; fixed; unshaken.

We hold firm to the works of God, and to the sense which is God's lamp. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He straight obeys;

And firm believes. Milton, P. L.

The great encouragement is the assurance of a future reward, the firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world.

Tillotson.

The man that's resolute and just,
Firms to his principles and trust.

Walsh.

3. Solid; not giving way; not fluid.
God caused the wind to blow to dry up the abundant slime and mud of the earth, and make the land more firm. Raleigh.

The muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, settled by degrees into a firm land.

Brown, Fable. &c.

It on firm land
Thaws not, but rather heap and ruin seems
Of ancient pile: all else deep snow and ice.

Milton, P. L.

Sinking waters, the firm land to drain,
Fill'd the capacious deep and firm'd the main.

Bacon.

FIRM. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A declaration in writing.

A privilege (was) given to Antemius, the archbishop (of Cyprus) in that age, to subscribe his name to all public acts in red letters, which was an honour above that of any patriarch, who writes his name or firm to black characters.

Bruce, State of the Greek Church, (1679) p. 90.

2. A mercantile term for the name under which a partnership carries on business.

The bill was carried by a very small majority,

Solymen, firmitas those letters with all their hands and seals. Arnot.

'Tis ratify'd above by every god,
And Jove has firm'd it with an awful nod.

Dryden, Albi.

The pow'r said he,
To you and your's, and mine, propitious be,
And firm our purpose with their augury.

Dryden, &c.

O thou, who freest me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wander'd in the maze of fate!
He present still: oh goddess, in our aid

Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made.

Pope, Statius.

2. To fix without wandering.

He on his card and compass firms his eye,
The masters of his long experiment.

Spenser, F. Q.

FIRMAMENT. n. s. [firmanentum, Latin.]

The sky; the heavens.

Evo to the heavens their shouting shrill
Deed reach, and all the firment doth fill. Spens.

I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true fix, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firment.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firment.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

The firment appears of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex

Of this great round. Milton, P. L.

The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle firment they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,

And we the earth and ocean haug below,
Ev'n I am wets'd with horror.

Addison, Ovid.

What an immeasurable space is the firment, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eyes, and many more discovered with our glasses! Brown, Astr. Theology.

FIRMAMENTAL. adj. [from firment.]

Celestial: of the upper regions.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In *firment*al waters dipt above.

2. Commodiously; neatly.

To take a latitude, Sun or stars are fitly view'd At their brightest; but to conclude Of longitude, what other way have we But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be. Dennam.

An animal, in order to be movable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Boyle, on Animals.

FIT'NESS, n. s. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgement of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hobbes.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness That we adjourn this court. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

We're my fitness

To let these hands obey thy boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Not time nor place
Did them censure, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fitness
now

- Does unmake you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
F'ITNESS. n. s. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeching: 'twas a fitness for
The purpose I then followed. Shakespeare, Cymb.

- F'ITTABLE. \ adv.* [from fit.] Suitable. Not now in use. Shakespeare.

- F'ITTER. † n. s. [from fit.]
1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furs seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fit of it for corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A small piece; as, to cut into fitlers.
[from fetta, Italian; setzen, German.] Skinner.

Where's the Frenchman? —
Alas! he's all to fitlers. Benson, and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

- F'ITTINGLY. \ adv.* [from the part. fitting.]
Properly; suitably.

It is rightly termed a new name, and very fittingly
write upon these Philadelphians.

- With the notion we have put upon this symbolical earth. Mary, Cong. Code, p. 149.

- FITZ. n. s. [Norman, from filz, a son, Fr.]
A son. Only used in law and genealogy:
as, Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert;
Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroger, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

- FIVE. † adj. [Fr, Saxon; funf, German;
finf, Goth. quingue, Latin.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. St. Matt. xiv. 2.

- No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like six fingers to the hand, where nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five.
Dryden, Daphne.

Five herds, five blooming flocks his pastures fill'd.
Dryden.

- Our British youth lose their figure by the time they are five and twenty.

- F'IVEBAR. \ adj.* [five and bar.]
F'IVEBARRED. \ adj.* Having five bars; usually applied to gates.

O check the foamy bit, o tempt thy fate;
Think of the murders of a *five*fold gate!
Guy, Hark of the Squire.

- There master Betty leaves a *five*fold'd gate,
Young Squire, 5.

- F'IVEFOLD. \ adj.* [five and fold.] Having five distinctions; composed of five materials.

We may observe a *five*fold difference among the creatures. Fotherby, Athena, p. 176.

- And bids his men bring out the *five*fold twine.
W. Browne.

- F'IVELEAF. \ n. s.* Cinquefoil.

Campan here he crops —

And from the falling-ill by *five*fold doth restore,
And melancholy cures by sovereign heliobore.
Dryden, Palmyr. S. 13.

- F'IVELEAVED Grass. † n. s. Cinquefoil;
a species of clover.

*Five*leaved grass, or cinquefoil, growth in low and shady places, sometimes by the waterside; it is dry in the third degree.

- F'IVES. n. s.
1. A kind of play with a ball.

2. A disease of horses.

His horse sped with spavio, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the *five*s, and stark-spotted with the *five*s. Shakespeare.

- TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus,
Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard the insufferable noise, hell saw Heaven running from heav'n, and would have fled

Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.
Milton, P. L.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell
In which of all these orbs hath man
His fix'd seat, or fix'd seat hath none,
But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell!
Milton, P. L.

One loves fix'd laws, and the other arbitrary power.

When custom hath fix'd his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sunneth
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight!
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprise.
Dryden, Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fix'd.
Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs.
Saunders.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must first upon some foundation that can never deceive us, L'Esrange.

He made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryd. Æn.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,
She fix'd on this her utmost remedy.
Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryd.

In most bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by.
Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,
Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Wallor.

3. To lose volatility; so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quick fix'd will fix and run no more, and cure the lunatic. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

- FIXA'TION. † n. s. [French, fixation.]
1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

Which some would fain set up as idols to such an immovable fixation, so if it were impious to endeavour to remove them.

Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handson, p. 57.
A vehement desire of affection, with an unalterable fixation of resolution.

The fixation of your creed, or, is the great object. — Liberto the custom has been to fix creeds from Scripture. But Scripture you seem prepared to discard, whenever it does not please you.

To light, created in the first place, God gave no proper place or fixation. Ratish, Hist. of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excusion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less malleable, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both of which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glennville, Serp.

- F'IXEDLY. \ adv.* [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Steadfastly.

Her look is quaint, with which wisely beholding
one, she fixedly looketh upon another.

Tranv. of Descartes, (1696), p. 71.
Omnipotency, omniscience, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fixedly looks on them. Burnet.

- F'IXEDNESS. † n. s. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

The heavens, or any part of them, never stood still, but once, since they were made; but the earth was made for fixedness and stability.

Ps. lxxviii, Rem. p. 66.
The fixedness of the eternal Firm.

Mary, Song of the Soul, l. 114.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire un-consumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehended all the middle degrees between extreme fluidity and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Boyle.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

The peril that arises to the heart from passion, is the fixedness of it, when, like a coarsening plaster, it casts into the soul, Ps. lxxviii, Contempt, B. 4.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. K. Charles.

- FIXI'DITY. n. s. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixity and v. s. tility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIX'ITY. n. s. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great caribb vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmosphere incumbent upon them? Newton, Opticks.

FIXT.* part. of the verb fix. Fixed. See To Fix.

FIXTURE.* n. s. [from fixt.] This word is unwarrantably inserted in some editions of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary; which has led Mr. Mason into an absurd and unjust attack upon Dr. Johnson for having arbitrarily altered fixure into fixture, to suit his purpose, for the latter word. Mr. Mason accordingly introduces fixure in his supplement, as if it had never before been noticed. But the fact is, that Dr. Johnson never noticed fixture; and that fixure is the word in his own editions of his work, as it really is in the passages which he cites from Shakespeare to illustrate it. Fixure, however, has been unaccountably given of late years in the Dictionary, with the examples from Shakespeare altered; and fixure has been as unjustly omitted. Fixture is a modern word. That which is fixed: a piece of furniture fixed to a house; as, he took the fixtures at a fair valuation.

FIXTURE.* n. s. [from fixt.]

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
 As we were mock'd with art. Shakspeare, Wind. Tude.
 Whose glorious fixure in so clear a sky.

Dryden, Baron's Wars, C. I.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait.

Shakspeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Fights, changes, borrowings,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
 The unity and married calm of states
 From their fixure. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.
FR'ZING.* n. s. [properly frizig, a sea term.]

1. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Canst thou with frizges pierce him to the quick,
 Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick.

Such [dolphins] we mist as we could entice to taste our books or frizges.

Sir T. Herbert, Trev. p. 95.

We saw also abundance of flying fish, and their continual enemies, the albacore and dolphin; the latter we strike now and then with a frizge or harping-iron.

Atkins, Voyager, p. 33.

2. A kind of firework, which boys make up in paper, and explode. [from fixz.]

Cotgrave in V. Troilov.

3. A gadding flirt.

Then starts forth a frizage,
 And she breaks a bow-pipe.

Shelton, Poems, p. 138.

TO FIZZ.* v. n. [from feet and Goth. fiza, To FIZZLE,] fix, a puff or blast; low Lat. visium.] To emit a slight and transient noise, or a slight continued noise; to make a kind of hiss. Ainsworth and others apply the latter of these words to suppressing wind from behind, or to fixt, which is sometimes written also fixt, and fyzt.

FLA'BBY.* adj. [flaccidus, Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but it is probably from the Teut. flabb, a flap to drive away flies, originally any thing limber or pendulous; or, as Serenius deduces it, from the Swed. "flabb, bucca, labium pendulum," who adds the adjective "flab-big, bucculentus," i.e. having blubbered lips.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
 Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA'BBEL.* n. s. [Lat. flabellum.] A fan. Obsolete.

Hulcot, and Sherwood.

FLA'BILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown.

Diet.

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak;

limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be, that the part against which the sun bestrides warms more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.
 They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callosities.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

FLACC'IDITY. n. s. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wise man, Surgery.

TO FLAC'KER.* v. n. [Teut. fliggeren.] To flutter as a bird. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dial.

TO FLAG.* v. n. [flaggeren, old Teutonic, to be loosened; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Atboi.

The judas
 That drag the tragick melancholy night,
 Who with their drowny, slow, and flagging wings
 Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
 The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
 Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her awn pitch,
 Like fire in air too damp, and lags along
 As if she were a body in a body:
 My senses too are dull and stupidified,
 Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be not becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wasteth, the language is thin. Flagging poets, starved, scarce covering the bone, and above like stones in a sack; some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.
 His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes.

Addison, Spect.
 If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
 My love above the starry vault I raise,
 Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
 I flag, I drop, and sutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag; he goes about watching when to devour us.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel torments from the spleen. Swift.

TO FLAG.* v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

The thought of dying may cool appetite and passion; it may blunt the edge of desire, and flag projects, chiefly those laid at a great distance.

Dr. Burnet, Sermon, p. 181.

Nothing so flags the nation, as the death of a king, and enfeebles the whole body of man, as intestine studies.

Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 29.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
 As well as Cupid, Time is blind;
 Soon must these glorious days of youth
 The fate of vulgar beauty find.

The thousand hours, that arm thy potent eye,
 Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flag by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.
 Can bulrushes bid by the river grow?
 Can flags there flourish where no waters flow.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton, Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.

Morimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
 Before the eye and prospect of your town,
 Have hither march'd to your endowment.

Shakspeare, A. John.

He hangs out as many flags as he deserveth vessels; square, if ships; if galleons, pendants.

Sandy, Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stripes of nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flag or pedigree.

Bacon.

Let him be girt
 With all the grisly legions that troop
 Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
 Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
 'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,

And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a false death.

The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground of pleasure for opening a war. Temple.
In either's flag the golden serpents rear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air.

Dryden, Aurungzeb.
Then they, whose mothers, frumkith with their fear,

In words and wilds the flag of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with diabolical'd hair.

Dryden, Æn.
3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French. But see also FLAW.]

Part of the flag was striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstones will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward on Fossils.

4. The surface of the earth, or upper turf, which they pare off, to burn, in den-sifying land. Norfolk Dialect. Grose.
The Lancashire dialect gives flaigh as a kind of light turf.

FLAG-BROOM, n. s. [from flag and broom.]
A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs,
or of the leaves of the dwarf-palm, imported from Spain.

FLAG-OFFICER, n. s. [flag and officer.] A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Add. Spec.

FLAG-SHIP, n. s. [flag and ship.]
The ship in which the commander of a fleet is.

FLAG-WORM, n. s. [flag and worm.]
A grub bred in watry places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months live at a flag-worm, or a green gentile. Watson, Angler.

FLAGELET, n. s. [from flagolet, French, derived by some from the Gr. φλαγιαν,
i. e. φλαγος, oblique, and αυλις, a pipe
or flute; by others from the Lat. flagellum, a little branch or twig. V. Roquefort, Gloss. et Morin, Dict. Etym.
Our own word is sometimes written flagolet.] A small flute; a small instrument of wind music.

Play us a lesson on your flageolet.
Moss, Divine Dialogues.

TO FLAG'GELATE, v. a. [Lat. flagello.]
To whip or scourge. Cockeram.

FLAGELLATION, n. s. [from flagellation, old
Fr.] The use of the scourge.

He underwent those previous pains which cus-tomarily antecede that suffering, as flagellation and bearing of the cross. Poers on the Cross, Art. 4.

By Bridewell all descended,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end.

Garth, Dispensary.
FLAGGINESS, n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity;
limberness; want of tension. Sherwood.

FLAG'GGY, adj. [from flaggy.]
1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedily way.

Spenner, F. Q.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.

Dryden, Virg.
2. Weak in taste; ineipid.

Graft an apple-on upon the stock of a cirwort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.

Becon, Nat. Hist.
FLAGITIOUS, adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]
1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L' Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Prognost with unknown crimes,

Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Racconomon.
Prejury is a crime of no flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it.

But if in noble minds some drugs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in these flagitious times. Page.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, and outcast of each church and state,
And harder still, flagitious yet not great. Page.

FLAGITIOUSNESS, n. s. [from flagitiosus.]
Wickedness; villany.

Others, who often would intentionally avoid all acts of flagitiousness and villany.

The Student, Def. of Relig. (1750), l. 176.

FLAG'GON, n. s. [from flagged, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flakke, Danish; flacon, French;
flanco, Italian; flasco, Spanish. After all these citations, from the Welsh to the Spanish, by Dr. Johnson; we must rather agree with Upton and Ainsworth, who derive the Latin lagena, a flagon, from λαγνη, Gr. a kind of cup, and a measure; which is from the Heb. lag, whence our word, prefixing the f or di-gamma.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Ribenish on my head once. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

More had sent him by a sutor in Chancery two silver flagons. Becon, Apophthegms.

Did they coin pipstos, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragons? Huicellens.

His truly flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use.

Racconomon.
One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him of his drink.

Dryden, Juv.
FLAG'RANCE, n. s. [old Fr. flagrance;
"flagrance" an odour, plain appearance of an offence, Cotgrave.] Notorious-ness; glaring offence.

They bring to him a woman taken in the flag-rance of her industry. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

FLAG'RANCY, n. s. [from flagrantia, Latin.]
1. Burning; heat; fire.

Last causers a flagrantcy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Becon, Nat. Hist.

2. Notoriousness; glaring impudence.

In some places they will assemble diverse of their fainter curtesans, to draw the modest beauty of a virgin out of the fragrantcy of harlots.

St. E. Soudy, State of Religion.
FLAG'RANT, adj. [from flagrant, old Fr.
flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Supio, at her toilet's greening task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in much begun,
Shine, busy, and fly-blown in the setting sun. Page.

3. Red; imprinted red.

The common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beards' lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into offence. "Pre-ndre au fait flagrant." Cotgrave.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation.

With equal police let steady justice away,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But till the proofs are clear the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAG'RANTLY, adv. [from flagrant.]
1. Ardently; eagerly.

2. Notoriously.

An epigram of four lines [is] a species of wit as flagrant, unamiable to the dignity, and as foreign to the nature of the lyric, as it is of the epic muse.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Poets.
To FLAG'GRATE, v. a. [Lat. flagrare.] To burn; to injure by fire.

This lamp stands on the foot of an eagle or hawk, therefore, says Kierkeby, to represent Typhos's destructive and flagrating power, lying hid in the sun, was made more temperate.

Greenhall, Art of Emblematism, (1705), p. 396.

FLAGRAT'ION, n. s. [from flagro, Latin.]
Burning. Dict.

See! in this glad farewell be doth appear,
Shew the constellations of his spirit,
Pearing we sum'd' frow'd no flagration,
Hild curled all his fires in this one One.

Loveland, Luc. Pouth. (1659), p. 72.

FLAG'GSTAFF, n. s. [flag and staff.]
The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering gunn a loud defiance roars,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaff rise.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.
FLAIL, n. s. [from flagellum, Latin; flagel, German, Dr. Johnson says. It is more directly the old French flail, or flaie,
"fléau à battre le bled." V. Roq.
Gloss.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the threshers.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail thruck'd not the corn,
That ten day-labourers could not end.

Milton, L'All.

In this plail shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of us, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The detestable handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government.

Locke.
The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE, n. s. [Sw. flake; Icel. flak,
a part separated from the rest, from flaka,
to divide; placca, Sax. flakes of snow;
flacke, Germ. a flake; focco, Ital. flocus,
Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amazed, and almost made afraid.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Greiv. Cambr. Sacra.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison on Italy.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the tooth would make.

To FLAKE, v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak peak no winds inclement blow,
Mould the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.

To FLAKE, v. n. To break into laminae;
to part in loose bodies.

- FLA'KY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Here, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolved the flaky texture keeps.

The banks with oase their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks divide.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

- FLAM† n. s. [A cant word of no certain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably the Gaelic flim, a mocking. Our old poets Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher use it evidently in the sense of a freak or whim. Sherwood calls flim a
"flimflam tale." See FLIMFLAM.]

1. A freak; a whim; a fancy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Hard tricks, anagrams,
Or eticotics, or your finer flams

Of eggs, and halberts, cradles and a hearse,
A pair of scissors, and a comb in vogue!

Then hast more of
These flams in thee, these musty doubts.

Best still when any hope was, at 'tis her trick
To minister more of those, then presently
With some new flam or other, nothing to the matter,
And such a flame, as would sink all before her,
She takes her chamber.

2. A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more sensible than the rog's 'tude.

Of old aruspicy and aug'ry.

Till those men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or adversely, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and chicanery, and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? 'Tis immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM, v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves 't avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.

God is not to be flammed off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what thou can'st not. South.

FLAM'BEAU. n. s. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with real to destroy.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death.

FLAME† n. s. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French; flam, old Cornish, old French and Celt.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation breathed red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.

What flame, what lightning's eye
So quickly an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all old flame plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame;
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofly and bold, but negligently dress'd.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld. Greenside.

To FLAME† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakspeare.

Hurl'd headlong flaming through the ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. L.

As one great furnace flam'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;

As soon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chasing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

Lascivious fires, should such flame in you,
As I must ne'er believe.

4. To inflame; to excite;
to animate.

Much was he moved at that rueful sight;
And, flam'd with zeal of vengeance inwardly;

He ask'd who had that dare so foely did;
Said, 'Tis I. Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 14.

And since their courage is so nobly flam'd,
This morning we'll behold the champions
Within the list. Beaumont, Fl. Conventions.

FLA'MECOLOUR. n. s. [flame and colour.]
The colour of flame.

The first was Splendor in a robe of flamecolour.
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Changing it from a red-rose crimson to flame- colour. See W. Petig, Spent's Hist. B. S. 384.

FLA'MECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.]
Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferently well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and choleric aspect, in a flamecoloured garment.

FLA'MEED. * adj. [flame and eye.]
Having eyes like flames. A fine epithet in the following fine lines.

Nor sea, nor shade, nor shield, nor rock, nor cave,
Nor silent deserts, nor the sullen grave,

Where flame-eyed Fury meets him, can save.
Quintus, Enclaud.

FLA'MELESS. * adj. [flame and less.] Without flame; without incense.

Both king, and priest, obnoxious to his hate,
Detests his sanctuary, and forswears
His flameless altar. Sandys, Lament. p. 4.

FLA'MEN† n. s. [Latin.] A priest;
one that officiates in solemn offices.

The heathen Romans, had their flamines, and archflamines; the Hebrews and Greeks their druids, Fetters, Dippers, &c. p. 190.

A deers and dying sound
Affrights the flamines at their service quail.

Then first the flamen tumbled living food;
Next his grim idol smother'd with human blood.

FLA'MING. * n. s. [from flame.] The act of bursting out in flames.

Which honour I to fiery flames compare;
For when they flash and flourish most of all,
Then suddenly their flamings quench'd are.

FLA'MINGLY. * adv. [from flaming.] Fla-miantly; most brightly.

FLA'MINGO. * n. s. The name of a very remarkable and beautiful bird, common in many parts of America, and seen at times in other parts of the world.

Here [at the Mauritius island] are also swarms of hawks, and sundry other birds; as goshawks,
hobbies, juncos, flamingoes, &c.

FLA'MINAL. * adj. [from flamen, Lat.]
Belonging to the Roman priest.

Superstitious copes and flaminical vestures.

FLAMMA'TION. n. s. [flammatio, Latin.]
The act of setting on fire.

White or crystalline arenic, being artificial,
and sublimed with salt, will not endure flam- mation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FLAMMAB'ILITY. n. s. [flamma, Latin.]
The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torried, that is, the city, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability. Brown.

FLA'MMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body.

FLAMMI'FEROUS. adj. [flammifer, Latin.]
Bringing flame.

FLAMM'YOMOUS. adj. [flamma and vomo, Latin.] Vomiting out flame. Dict.

FLA'MY.† adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.
My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue off in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound to by a body they will.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Flame coloured.

A flamy redness will overspread the heavens.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 53.

FLANG.* old pret. of the verb fling. See TO FLING.

On every side full fast we flang the Frenchmen down,
Misc. for Mag. p. 469.

FLANK.† n. s. [flanc, French, agreeing to Menage, from auxis; more probably from latius, Latin. So far Dr. Johnson. Our word, which is also the Germ. flanke, is, however, the Teut. flanke, the same, with the addition of f. In this Kilian and Wachter agree.] This Kilian and Wachter agree.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.
Poachan.

Do not those goodly flanks and bristles march up in your stately chargers?

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collars of fat on his flanks. Job, xv. 27.
He said, and pois'd in air the jav'lin sent;
Through Paris' shielded the forceful weapon went,
His corselet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.
Page.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleries that stood on his flank.
Bacon, War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in or as he might take the flank of the enemy.
Hagyard.

To right and left the front

Divided and to either flank retired. Milton, P. L.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

TO FLANK.† v. a. [Fr. flanquer.]

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates adverse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden, Zen.

We cannot talk in rank and file, and flank and rear our discoverers with military allusion.
Scott, Sermon before the Artillery Comp. (1680).

Works, i. 24.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay.
Dryden.

TO FLANK.* v. n. To border; to touch.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it.

Butler, Rem. ed. Thyr. vol. i. p. 417.

FLANKER.† n. s. [from flank.] A forti-cation jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flanks, were enforced to retire.

Knellet, Hist. of the Turks.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flanks, ports, and towers.
Parfleur.

In this disorder, a flanker by mischance was blown up; but the siege continued.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 109.

TO FLANK.† v. a. [flanquer, French.]

1. To defend by lateral fortifications.

The city is compassed with a thick wall, flanker'd, and moated about.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

The castle was neither so weakly manned, nor flanker'd, as they were made to believe.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 377.

2. To attack sideways.

Where sharp winds do rather flanker, than blow fully opposite upon, our platoons, they thrive best.
Earl, i. lib. 1.

FLANKEL. n. s. [gwelanen, Welsh; from gwelan, wool, Davies.]

A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welsh flannel. Shakspeare.

TO FLANT.† See TO FLAUNT.

FLAP.† n. s. [flappe, Teut. a flyflap; originally, any thing pendulous. See FLABBY.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an oval cavity for the admission of the air.
Broussais.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp, Surgery.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swell'd on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg; cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Ferriar's Dict.

TO FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle; the eagle flap'd off the former, and devour'd the other.
L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt that stinks and sings.
Page.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap flies plume off, he cultivate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Philips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And striking at her window thrice
The raven flap'd his wing. Titchell.

TO FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

"'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, dishearten'd him in the duel. Dryden, Æn.

2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long used to storms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

Gay, Trivia.

FLAPDRAGON.* n. s. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire. The word is sometimes called insapdragon, or slapdragon.]

1. A play in which they catch raises out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them. Gallants thus drank the healths of their mistresses.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quois well, and eats conger and feroel, and drinks candles ere for flapdragons, and rides the healths with the boys.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. p. II.

Flapdragons, healths, whiffs, and all such swagging humours. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

TO FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

To swallow; to devour.

Low cant.

But to make so end of the ship, to see the sea flapdragoned it. Shakspeare, Wind. Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whorson, beetleheaded, flap-eared knave.

Shakspeare.

FLA'P'ACK.* n. s. An apple puff, so called in some counties; anciently a pancake.

We'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and moreover puddings and flapjacks; and thou shalt be welcome. Shakspeare, Pericles.

FLA'MOUTHED.* adj. [flap and mouth.] Having loose lips.

When he [the bound] had caw'd his noise,
Another flap-mouth'd scoundrel black and grim,
Against the welkin vollied on his face.

Shakspeare, Tem. and Adonis.

FLA'PPER.* n. s. [from flap.]

1. A fan, or flap for wind. Barret.

2. Figuratively, one who endeavours to make another remember.

I write to you, by way of flapping, to put you in mind of yourself. Ld. Chesterfield.

TO FLANE. v. a. [from flacere, to flatter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from flanc.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing.
And in the ear, not convincing ring. Herbert.

2. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, his gods, bringing
To arch'd walks of twilight groves. Milt. II. Pers.

3. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay
Flaring to sunshine all the day. Prior.

4. To flatter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.

Shakspeare.

FLASH.* n. s. [phlax, Gr. a flame, Minshew; to which Dr. Johnson accedes.

Skinner offers blaze as the etymology. Our word seems to have some connection with the Icel. flax, a tumbling down from a high place; as, where it means a body of water driven by violence.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

In the crown blue light 'nigh seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did prevent myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till this flat gash a mountain you have made,
To o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton, P. L.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall.
Shakespeare, Tempest.

Half my pow'r 'tis this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Relph, Ec.
Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now furnished with their unobscured wit in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy.

Milton on Education.
Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd
land,
And sea-men with disembled depths betray.

Dryden.
Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted maceade came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bld me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the demons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but an
I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together?

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills.

Bentley, Sermon.

8. [In music.] A kind of additional or half note, contrived, together with sharps, to remedy the defects of musical instruments; which, taking the name of the natural note next above it, and having a distinctive mark, is called a flat. Thus D flat signifies a semitone below D natural.

To FLAT.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several false-trees, or flats them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the sun, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Hideth their swelling lips, and flats their nose.

2. To make rapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrap't in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To render unanimated or enervated.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unprepared and confused variety to distract and lose it. K. Clarke.
It mortifies the body, and flats the pleasure of the senses. Glanville, Sermon, p. 279.

To FLAT. v. n. To grow flat; opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

FLAT-BOTTOMED.* adj. [flat and bottom.]

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.

Unjust, then say 't,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free.

Milton, P. L.
Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS.† n. s. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.
The flatness of the bottom [of the ark].
Biblioth. Disch. (Dr. 1790.), i. 234.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would believe the carver looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Models.

3. Deadness; insipidity; rapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer, on Flattery.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he bid but see
The flatness of my misery. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertendency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLAT-SO'ED.* adj. [flat and soe.] Having a flat nose; camous. Huot.

If she be flat-soe'd, she is lovely!
Burton, Anal. of Med. p. 536.

What vicious clerk would he so swell them where all the corners are white, be they never so black; and where flatsoe'd people are the most comely? Wp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 236.

To FLAT-TEN.† v. a. [flatir, French; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

As if for that time their round bodies flatten'd down. Poems, p. 298.

vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeit, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.

FLAT-TEN. n. s. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLAT-TEN.† v. a. [flater, French;
fladra, Icelandic; to flatter, to fawn; flater, a woman who flatters; flätsen, Teut. to flatter, and also viden.]

1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent.
Shakespeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xlii. 5.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms xlii. 9.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of party, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decoy of Flattery.

Averse alike to flatter or offend.
I scorn to flatter you or any man.

Newton, Diss. to Milton's Works.

2. To praise falsely.
Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provokes our censure. Young.

3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts make a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them.

Dryden, Dufrancy.

4. To raise false hopes.

Who always vaunt, always amiable,

Hopes these, of flattery are Unmistaken. Milton, Ode of Horace.

FLATTERER. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a flatterer; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falshies.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,

He says he does; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and as if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man; if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perform. Bacon, Ess.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,

Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.

Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman; what is still worse, the most subject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison, Guardian.

The public should know that yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLATTERINGLY.* adv. [from flattering.] In an artfully obsequious manner.

Flatteringly to creep, to dissemble.

Dale on the Rect. P. l. (1550), sign. I. iii. b. He flatteringly encouraged him in the opinion of his own inertia. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 169.

FLATTERY. n. s. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness, And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery.

Rome.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands.

See how they beg an aim of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lie.

Young.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

There are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLATULENCY. n. s. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turbulence; flat of wind confined.

Vegetable substance contains a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness. Whether want of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of this airy scheme of notions. Glenville.

FLATULENT. adj. [from flatulent, flatus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pne are mild and demulcent; but being full of anise particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger, but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glenville, Serpents.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. s. [from flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fullness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moved to expel; and all purgers have to throw a new spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tendron in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLATUOUS.* adj. [Fr. flatueux, from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesenteric veins; and, being opening, it helpeth down a flat. Boon, Nat. Hist.

Her mother hath of late been much troubled (and I think as much in her fancy, which is the greater cure, as in her body), with a pain in her side, which changeth place, and therefore is sure but a flatuous infirmity. Watson, Mem. p. 462.

FLATULUS.* n. s. [Latin.]

1. Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromatics. Quincy.

2. A breath; a puff.

You make the soul, as being a mere flatus, to have a more precarious subsistence even than mere matter itself. Clarke, Lett. to Dodwell, p. 51.

FLATWISE. adj. [from flat and wise; so it should be written, not flangage.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposed. Woodward on Fossils.

TO FLAUNT.* v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. The word seems to be allied to the Icel. flaana, to be carried away with precipitation, to run about with uncertainty. Ainsworth, however, deduces it from the Lat. laulus, fine, costly. The word is often written flaut.]

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

'Twas when young Eustace fought his battles in compliments and cringes, when his underclothing waved in a flaunting feather, and his best contemplation looked no further than a new-fashioned doublet. Brown, and Fl. Elder Brother.

With ivory canopied, and interwove With flaunting bouquett. Milton, Comus.

For useless ornament and flaunting show; We take on trust, to purple robes to shine, And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden, Jun.

You set, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never solodng me nor your numerous family. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To face; to carry a pert or saucy appearance.

The tropical rhetorician and the flaunting orator, the jibing satyr and scurrilous comedian. Boyle.

Ep. Seth Ward's Apology for the Mysteries of the Gospel, 1673, p. 15.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently vain enough to immoderate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

3. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper; the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in meo has some small difference made; One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope, Ess.

FLAUNT.* n. s.

1. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how, Should I in these my borrow'd flouts behold The sternness of his province! Shakspeare, Hist. Hen. VIII.

2. An ostentatious display; a brag.

Dost thou come hither with thy flourishes, Thy flouts, and faces, to abuse men's fancies? Benson, an Act. Fl. One

FLAVOUR.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It may be the French flair, a scent. The Welsh flair is a stink.]

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison, Spect.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and he blushing rose, With bending leaves, so night their bloom disclose, Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits decline'd From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAVOURED.* adj. [from flavour.] Having a fine taste.

Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food, And flavoured Chian wines. Dyer.

FLAVOUS.* adj. [Lat. flavous.] Yellow.

The membrane itself is somewhat of a flavous colour, and tends more towards that of gold, than any other part whatsoever. Smith, Physiog. of Old Age, (1666), p. 219.

FLAW.* n. s. [Flaw, Gr. to break; gloh, Saxon, a fragment. So far Dr. Johnson.

Mr. Horne Tooke observes, that flaw is the past participle of the Sax. flenn, to flay. But I may carry this etymology to a higher source. The Iceland, flagan is to divide, or break up as it were by the plow; and flagi, is a part so separated or broken up. The Swedish flaga is a breach or flaw. And this may be deduced from flan, to strip off the rind or skin. See To FLAY. The example from Shakspeare, under Dr. Johnson's first definition of this word, certainly signifies a small broken particle. Our word was formerly written also sometimes flaugh.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws, Or ere I weep. Shakspeare, A. Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bungle hole open. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bek'd vessel found; 'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden, Pers.

As if great Atlas, from his height, Should sink beneath his heavenly weight; And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shal,

Should gaps immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this mether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-rose receive a flaw. Pope.
He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time will bring all to ruin.
Smyth.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes and brokers do value untried men to serve their own turn. Bacon, Est.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known;
But since some flaws in long decays may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.
Their judgement has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admire. Addison, Spect.
So many flaws had this vice in its first conception.
Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flo, Latin.] Obsolete.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, 't' expel the winter's flaw. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

What fumes and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms have been aloft these three days.
Brown, and Fl. The Pilgrim.

One kind of these storms they call a flaw, or flaw, which is a mighty gale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working among whatever it encounters in its way. Cervus, Surv. of Cornwall.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north-flow frail,
So, seen against the ground,
Was fail'd Urialas. Chapman, Hind.

Expect rough seas, flaws, and contrary blasts.
Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 1.

Hurting their breast daunted, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argæus loud,
And Thracias rend the woods, and seas upturn.
Milton, P. L.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear
them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basins underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton, P. L.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not come to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis draws,
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw
When first it broke, the crowding engines saw,
Which chok'd 't the passage. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

On these flaws and starts,
Importers to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Attack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burnt uningly. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Bogde.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stail with ice, at hearth is thaw'd.
Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attack'd
Our merchants' goods. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

flaxen thread that shoemakers use. Sherr, Surgery.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig. Addison.
FLAXWHEEL. n. s. A plant.

FLAXY. n. adj. [from flax.] Of a light colour; fair.

The four colours — signify these four virtues.
The flaxy, having whiteness appertains to temperance,
because it makes "candidum et mundum animam." Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1654), p. 16.

TO FLAY. v. a. [flay, Dutch; flay, Saxon;
Danish: vlædt, Dutch; plean, Saxon.]
And our own word was formerly written flæa and flæan. Some etymologists derive flay from the Greek, φλάω, phlaō, to strip off the bark.]

1. To strip off the skin.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts,

TO FLEET-† v. n. pleotan, Saxon; fliota, Icel. flyta, Su. Goth.]

1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash conceits despair!
A wolf, who, hang'd for his man slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet. Shaks.

2. To be in a transient state; the same with fit, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather the same with float, to skim along.

Fleet is our old verb for float. See the next definition, overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremovable superficiality, that may limit to our acquaintance.

Disley on Ordes.

O fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear-bought with lasting woes!
Milton, P. L.

While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:
That powerful noise
Calls my fleeting soul away. Waller.

As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their fleeting forms scarce sooner found than lost.

Prior.

3. "To fleet about the water;" to float. Barrett.

Who swelling sails in Cyprian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood on Adrian gulf doth fleet. Spenser, F. Q. li. vii. 14.

Our sever's heavy too
Have knit again, and fleet. Shaks. Ant. & Cleop.

TO FLEET-† v. a.

1. To skim the water. Dr. Johnson here cites, from Spenser, the example which I have placed under the third definition of the verb neuter; where, in order to make the verb active, he unjustifiably reads "an Adrian gulf," and destroys entirely the sense of the poet.

2. To live merrily, or pass time away lightly.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day,
and fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden age. Shakespeare.

3. [In the country.] To skim milk; to take off the cream; whence the word fleeting dish. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this expression; which, however, is very old. "Flet of mylke, or other lyke, desumptum." Prompt.

Parr. plet, Sax. flos lactis. Lye.

He fletted off the cream of the king's manors. Sir A. Wilson, Court of K. James, p. 51.

FLEETFOOT-† adj. [fleet and foot.] Swift of

Like a wild bird, being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleetfoot roe that's tir'd with chasing.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Aden.

FLEETINGISH, n. s. [frou and flet, and dish.] A skimming bowl.

FLEETLY, adv. [from fleet.] Swiftly; nimbly; with swift pace.

The fleetness of time. Lord Chesterfield.

FLEGM-† See PHLEGM.

FLEMING-† n. s. [Sax. plyming, plyma, a wanderer, an exile; whence, according to Laurence Noel, the Flemings are named; by reason that their country, being wild and strong, was a fit receptacle for outlaws; and so was first inhabited. But this may be doubted.

Inundation might occasion them to be wanderers or exiles.] A native or inhabitant of the Low Countries.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, an Irishman with my aquavite bottle, or a thief to walk my smilging gelding, than my wife with herself. Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

FLEMISH-† adj. Relating to the character or history of the Flemings.

What an unweighed behaviour hath this Fleming drunkard picked out of my conversation. Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

FLESH-† n. s. [flepe, plep, Saxon; fleik, Icel. fleisch, German, fleesch, Dut. leik, M. Goth. lik, Su. Goth. V. Wachter, Gloss.]

1. The body distinguished from the soul.

Contin. of Shelton's Don Quix. ch. 24.
FLIMMINES. * n. s. [from flim.] Easy texture.

There is a certain flimminess in poetry, that seems expeditious in its style.

FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers, Dr. Johnson says. May it not be a corruption of film, which is a thin covering or skin?] 1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.

Walsh was in general a flimsy and frigid writer.
Dr. Warren, Ess. on Pope.

To FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner. To this etymology Dr. Johnson accedes. It may more easily be deduced from the Sax. flion, to avoid any thing.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South, Sermon.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break thee, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpunished let me die. Shaksp.

FLINCH. v. n. [from the verb.] One who shrinks or fails in any matter.

But make this good upon us as you have promised.
You shall not find us flinchers. Reynolds, and Fl. Bloody Brothers.

After that sharp reprehension of flinchers from the faith, he returns to encourage and corroborate the church in Smyrna.

More on the Ser. Churches, p. 51.

FLINDERMOURSE. * n. s. [a corruption of flintermouse or flittermouse.] A bat.

Large wings on him did grow,
Fram'd like the wings of flindermouse. Cooper, Zedric of Life, (1565), p. 9.

The other — had wings like a bat, or flindermouse. Night, Trial of Truth, (1590,) fol. 9. b. FLINDERS. * n. s. pl. Teut. flenters. n. s. pl. FLINTERS. } ters; rags; shreds; broken pieces. Flinders is the Northern word; flinters is a vulgar expression.

To FLING. v. a. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner; according to others, from fly; so to fling is to set flying. Thus far Dr. Johnson. Serenius mentions the Su. flenga, jacere, i. e. to cast or throw, as the parent of our word; fleiga, Icel. the same. The Goth. flinga, is to strike.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shaksp. Coriol.

'Tis fate that flings the dice! and as she flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Dennham.

3. To scatter.
West winds, with musky wing,
About the odour allies flung. Milton, Comus.

Nard and Cassia's balmy smells,
E'er'v beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.
A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

5. To move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to no small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison, Spect.

6. To cast; in an ill sense.
I know thy ge'rous temper;
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire. Addison, Cato.

7. To force into another condition, properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flung.
Do scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spens.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubts. Addison, Spect.

To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
Fearing lest, futed at too much ease, he [the horse] was headstrong, and fall to kicking and flinging, instead of carrying his rider well and quietly. Hornor, Transl. of Hen's Sermon, (1587), p. 579.

Neither fares it otherwise than with some wild colt, which, at the first taking up, flings and plunges, and will stand no ground.

By. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 86.

The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he'd been beside his sense. Hudibras.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contenting 'gainst obedience. Shaksp. Coriol.

FLING. v. n. [from the verb.] 1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
Else would I have a fling at Winchester. Shaksp. K. Hen. VI. p. 1.

No little scribbler is it with to fling.
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.

I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Dryden.

FLINGER. n. s. [from the verb.] 1. One who throws. Sherwood.

2. One who jeers.

FLINT. n. s. [flint, Saxon.] 1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough; its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.

Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred,
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.

There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

Take this, and lay your flint ad'g' weapon by.
Dryden.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbour'ing wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.

Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

FLINTHEART. * adj. [flint and heart.] FLINTHEARTED. } Having a hard heart; cruel.

Under the conduct of great Soliman,
Have I been chief commander of an host,
And put the flint-heart Persians to the sword. Trag. of Soliman and Persians, (1596.)

Oh pity, gaze she cry, flint-hearted boy.
Shaksp. Ven. and Adon.

FLINTY. adj. [from flint.] 1. Made of flint; strong.
He made him to suck honey out of the rock,
and oil out of the flinty rock. Deut. xxxii. 15.

Thyrist custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shaksp. Othello.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
Gratitude,
Through flinty Thyrus's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shaksp. Ant. & Wall.

Flinty hearts of men turned into flesh.

Sp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

FLIP. n. s. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The seawarlike and swabber is lolling at Madagascars, with some drunken saunterer where, or a can of flip.
Dennis.

FLIPPANCY. n. s. [from flippant.] Pertness; brash folly.

FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flippant.] Dr. Johnson. — Yet Dr. Johnson cites the authority of Addison, to which I may add the elder and more weighty usage of the word by Barrow.]

1. Nimble; movable. It is used only of the act of speech.

It becometh good men, in such cases, to be brisk and gay in their looks, flippant and free in their speech.

Barrow, Sermon on Gunpowder Treason.

An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in certain juices, which render it so wonderfully volatile or flippant.
Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; wagghish.

Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.

FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

In a flowing prating way.

To FLIP. See To FLIPPER.

To FLIPPER. v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound, and Dr. Johnson offers no other etymological remark. It is probably from the Sax. plepban, trifle, pleaps, trifles. Or it may be formed from feer. See To FLEER. This might seem to belong exclusively to the verb neuter, if we had not also flirt as a verb active in the sense of jeer; of which sense, however, Dr. Johnson, has taken no notice.]

1. To throw any thing with a quick elastic motion.

Dick the scavenger

Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face.

Suett.

2. To throw out words carelessly; to blurt.
Our cousin Archy hath more privilege than any; for he often goes with his foot-cloth where the infants is with her ladies, and flirts out what he lists.
Hewell, Lett. i. iii. 18.

3. To move with quickness.

Permit some happier man,

To kiss your hand or flirt your fan.
Dorset.

4. To jeer; to treat with scoffs.

I am asham'd, I'm scorn'd, I'm flurled.

Rowe, and Fl. Walgrave-Chase.

Is this the fellow,

That had the patience to become a fool,

A flurled fool. Beaumont, and Fl. Rule a Wife.

To FLIRT. v. n.

1. To jeer; to gibe at one.

2. To run about perpetually; to be unsteady and fluttering.

The wife that gads not, giglot-wise,

Presentation of Shakespeare's Sermon. (1576), p. 224.

3. To act with levity; to be guilty of a kind of coquetry; from the preceding use of the word. Modern.

FLIRT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick elastic motion.
In unfurling the fan, are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings.
Addison, Spect.

Before you pass th' imaginary night,

While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Topce.

2. A sudden trick.

Have licence to play,

At the hedge a flirt,

For a sheet or a shirt.

B. Jonson, Cyprius.

3. A pert young hussey.

I do not apologise here for any headstrong, unruly, wanton flirts. Burton, Anat. of Med.

Salute the skirts

Of her, to whom all ladies else are flirts.

B. Jonson, Masques.

Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world.

Addison, Guardian.

4. A jeer; a gibe.

They have play'd their prizes with me,
And with their several flirts they have lighted dangerously;

But sure I shall be quit.

Beaumont, and Fl. Spem, Corate.

FLIRT. adj. Pert; wanton. Applied to gill as a toman. See GILL and To FLIRT. v. n.

Scurry knave! I am none of his flirt gills.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Thou took'st it me up at every word I spoke,

As I had been a mawkin, a flirt gillian.

Beaumont, and Fl. The Chances.

FLIRTATION. n. s. [from flirt.]

1. A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin founce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air.

2. Hence the more modern acceptation, a desire of attracting notice.

Flirtation is short of coquetry, and intimates only the first hints of approximation!

Chambers, World, No. 101.

FLIRTIOUS. n. s. [from flirt and gig. See the fourth sense of Gig.] A waggon, pert girl. Still a northern word. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Grose and Brockett.

To FLIRT. v. n. [from fleet; or from flytter, Danish; to remove; or from the Sax. flisc.]

1. To fly away.

Likens it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,

Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray.

Spenser, F. & G.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term. It was once common also in England, as it should seem, by the admission of it into Barret's Alveary in 1580. "To remove or go from one place to live in another: to flit." And it is still retained in our northern counties. See FLITTING. The examples from Spenser given by Dr. Johnson, shew the word as a verb active, to put from its place; and flit is still older as a verb active, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it as such at all.

It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other.

Hobbes.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.

He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird.

Dryden, Rn.

Fear the just gods, and think of Seylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air.

Pope.

4. To be flux or unstable.

Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong light did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble bound
Her flitting parts, and element unbound.

Spenser, F. Q.

The especial cause of this levity and flitting disposition, in the common and ordinary sort of men, is their disability to discern the strength of such reasons as may be framed against them.

Hales, Rem. p. 12.

He stoop at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryd. Rn.

To FLIT. v. a. To remove out of its place; to dispossession.

The word [of the arrow] was left behind —
So sore it stuck when I was hit,
That by no craft I might it flit.

Chaucer, Rom. B. v. 1812.

His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted in,
Whether the souls of men do fly that live amiss.

Spenser, F. Q.

So hardly he the flitted life did win
Unto her native prison to return. Spenser, F. Q.

FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not now in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were in poison and in blood of malice and despite.

Spenser, F. Q.

And life itself as flit as is the air we breathe.

P. Fletcher, Purp. Island, li. 7.

FLITCH. n. s. [flitch, Saxon; flyche, Dan. fleche, fliche, French. Skinner. The old French, Dr. Johnson might have added, is flit; and the Icelandic. flyche, probably from flata to divide. See FLAKE. A flit or bacon is still common in the north of England. It is our old word. The side of a hog salted and cured.

Another brought a spycke
Of a bacon flitch. Skelton, Poems, p. 133.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birth days, festivals, or days of state;
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.

Dryden, Jes.

While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,

Cut out large slices to be fry'd.

Swift.

He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon.

Addison.

To FLITE. v. n. [flytan, Sax. contendere, rixare.] To scold. Used throughout the north. Written also flit and flyte. See Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Grose, Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, and Wiltshire's Cheshire Words.

To FLITTER. v. n. [a corruption of fluter.] To be in agitation; to be flux or unstable.

Work of fluttering matter. Chauc. Boeth. Metr. ix.
Fends flutered in the ayre for fere.

Lth. Fest. fol. 28. b.

Under such props false fortune builds her bowers;

On sudden change her fluttering frames be set.

Mur. for Mag. p. 502.

FLITTER. v. n. [Icel. fletia.] A rag; a tatter.

The box was snapp'd asunder, and the wig torn all to flitters.

Aubrey's Miscel. p. 116.

FLITTERMOUSE. n. s. [a corruption of flit and mouse. Teut. fledermuis.] The bat; the winged mouse.

Sherwood.

The blood of a flittermouse. Middleton's W. Rich.

FLOATINESS. * n. s. [from flut.] Unsteadiness; lightness.

Had we but the same delight to heavenly objects, but we receive the truth to the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the bearing; this would fix that volubility and fineness of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary.

Bp. Hopkins. Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 314.

FLOATING. * n. s.

1. An offence; a fault; a failure; a desert. [plut. Saxon, Scandal.] So far Dr. Johnson. The example he gives of this alleged sense is from Psal. lvi. 8. "Thou tellest my floatings." In the Bible translation it is wanderings; which bishop Patrick paraphrases, "Thou art perfectly acquainted how often I have been forced to fly, like a vagabond, from place to place; which hath cost me many a tear." See also Pol. Synops. Crit. where the word is migrations, vagations, fugas, vol. 2. P. i. col. 913. We may consider, therefore, floatings, used in the translation of the psalm in our Common-Prayer-Book, as meaning no more than wandering, or removal from place to place.

2. Removal. [from flut.]

Seeing our whole life is but a vapour, or a floating. Dr. Plafiere. Nour. Serm. 1621, p. 52.

Two floatings are as bad as one fire, i. e. household goods are as much injured by two removals by one fire. North. Croak.

FLOATY. * adj. [from flut.] Unstable. Not now in use.

Buying their brains in the mysterious toys of flitting motion. Merr. Song of the Soul. l. i. 11.

FLOAT. * n. s.

1. Down; fir; soft hair. [corrupted from flax.]

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey; His warm breath blows her flut up as the lies; She trembling creeps upon the ground away, And looks back to him with beseeching eyes. Dryden.

2. Dysentery. [corrupted from flux; common in old language.]

The father of Publius lay sick of the fever, and of a bloody flut. Act. xxi. 40. Trem. of 1578.

FLO'WOOD. * n. s. A plant.

FLO. * n. s. [Sax. fla.] An arrow. The word is in our old lexicography. Obsolete.

His bow he bent and set therein a flut. Chaucer. Mancip. Tale.

To FLOAT. * v. n. [flutier, French. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the Sax. fleocan, or flotan. See To FLEET.]

1. To swim on the surface of the water.

The presentation of but what I was. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of a colded truth. Crowshay.

3. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance. This is a flourish, there follow excellent paraboles. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or break it out. Mere, Divine Dialogues.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great intricacies, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Extrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, the least beliv'd by them. Smith, Sermon.

Studious to please the genius of the times, With periods, points, and tropes he stuns his crimes;

He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say't thou; what, to be prais'd and sung? Dryden.

4. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

5. A kind of musical prelude. The lute's light genius now does proudly rise,

Heav'd on the surges of swoll rhapsodies;
Whence flourish, meter-like, doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies here and there Dancing in lofty measures. Crowshay, Poems, p. 85.

6. A blossom. North. Grose.

FLOURISHER. n. s. [from flourish.] On that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd old, they may, or in his flow'r;
For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in poet's. Chapman, Iliad.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLO'WER.† n. s. [flur, Goth. flour, French; flor, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect.

Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves: as in borage, buglos, or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into tri, semipetalous, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariltoctolia; 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the anacanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers; and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcisus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galeate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is infire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Coriunculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum. 2d, Planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called staminateous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flower in their caps, Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp. Much.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance,
we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips,
and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being to prime and inseparable a flower of their country, he must reserve to himself. Clarendon.

From me do back receive the flow'rs of all,
And leave me but the bran. Spenser, Coriol.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

But by thy cure twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope, Ode.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable
the palms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hosier.

subjects; the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shaksp. Rom. and Jul.

FLOW'ER DE LUCE.† n. s. [flaur-de-lis, Fr.]

Our word was formerly written flower-de-luce, and is thus distinguished by the contemporary commentator on Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar: "Flower
de-luce, that which they use to mistle flower de-luce, which in Latin called flor
delitaurum." A bulbous iris.

Müller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is justly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its varie-gated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crocy'd are the flower de luce in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakspere, Hen. VI.

The iris is the flower de luce. Prechance.

The goodly flower-de-luce. Dryden, Polyd. S. 15.

TO FLOW'ER. v. n. [flaurir, French; or from the v. n.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the soldiers of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Spenser, F. Q.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd, Op'ning their various colours. Milton, P. L.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden, Cocc.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope, Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whiloms in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring
Like swallow swift I wander'd here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting.
That I of doubtful danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring years,
Within a lathouse dungeon there to pine. Shakspere, Hen. VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under did not, though it were fresh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were,
the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.

TO FLOW'EN. v. a. [from the noun.]

To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers.

FLOW'ER-GENTLE.* n. s. A species of amaranth.

Blue harebells, pagles, pansies, calaminth,
Flower-gentle, and the fair-hair'd hysclop. B. Jonson, Magnates.

FLOW'ER-INOVER.* adj. [flower and in- terweave.] Adorned with flowers.

With flower-inovers tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton, Ode Nativ.

FLOW'ERAGE.† n. s. [from flower; French, flourage.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLOW'ERET. n. s. [flaurer, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would agitate
With gaudy garlands of fresh flow'ers right,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plait. Spenser, F. Q.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Scod now within the pretty flow'ers' eyes,
Like tears, that do the very own disgrace bewail. Shaksp.

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'ers deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton, P. L.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'ers
crown'd,
And largely perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves. Dryden, Fob.

FLOW'ERGARDEN. n. s. [flower and gar- den.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try these shells in my flower-garden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLOW'ERINGS.* n. s. [from flower.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOW'ERING.* n. s. [from flower.]

1. State of blossom; as, flowering of bulbous plants.

2. A sort of froth.

An excessive clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flower. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLOW'ERINGBUSH. n. s. A plant.

FLOW'ERLESS.* adj. [flower and less; a one of our oldest words.] Without a flower.

An herbe he brought, flowerless, all green. Chaucer, Ch. Dreem, vers. 1860.

FLOW'ERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton, Ode.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope, Ode.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLOW'RY-KITLED.* adj. [flowery and kirtle.] Dressed in robes or garlands of flowers.

The flow'ry-kitled Naidon, Culling their potent herbs and balaful drugs. Milton, Comus.

FLOW'ING.* n. s. [from flow.] The rise of the water; the flow.

In religious forms, what ebbs and flowings
have been, and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion!
By Taylor, art. Hindostan. p. 154.

We must have perpetual ebbs and flowings
of mind and intellectuality. Milton, Comus.

FLOW'ING.* n. s. [from flow.] The rise of the water; the flow.

In religious forms, what ebbs and flowings
have been, and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion!
By Taylor, art. Hindostan. p. 154.

We must have perpetual ebbs and flowings
of mind and intellectuality. Milton, Comus.

FLOW'INGLY.* adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance. Sherwood.

FLOW'INGNESS.* n. s. [from flowing.] A stream of diction.

Dr. Tillotson polished over whatever was left rough in the compositions with his smooth language, and flowings of his easy eloquence. Nichols, Def. of the Doct. and Disc. of the Ch. of Engl. Intro.

FLOW'K.† n. s. [Sax. fluc, Flow.] A flower; the name of a fish.

Amongst these flow'ks, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Cowley, Survey of Cornwall.

FLOW'KWORK. n. s. The name of a plant.

FLOWNS. Participle of fly, or flew, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, but left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton, P. L.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; cante.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the souls
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton, P. L.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CIANT.* adj. [fluant, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

Such is the fluant condition of human generation, and of those relations, which arise from thence, that he, which is this day a son, the next may prove a father, and in the space of one day more, without any real alteration in himself, become neither son, nor father, losing one relation by the death of him who taught him, and the other by the departure of him that was begotten of him.

Person on the Creed, Art. 1.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuating wandering humour and opinion?

L'Estrange.

TO FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluctuo, Lat.]
1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious motions bow'ring there,
And the wide regions of the deep, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame.

Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.
3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter

New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disur'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either rest upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements.

Adams, Spect.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.
FLUCTUATION. n. s. [fluctuatio, Lat.]
fluctuation, Fr. from fluctuo.

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulars.

Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertainty; indeterminateness.
It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgement little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error.

Boyle.

3. Violent agitation.

I have seen a crowd of disorderly people rush violently, and in heaps, till their utmost border was restrained by a wall, or had spent the fury of the first fluctuation and watery progress; and by and by it returned to the contrary with the same earnestness, only because it was violent and unguided.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. 8.

FLUE. n. s. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from fluv of fly, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the French l'ouvert, an opening, whence our old word louver, signifying an opening to let out smoke; used by Spenser. See LOUVER.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

Flue [flue] a narrow outlet for smoke, to encrease the draught of air. North.

Pegge.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE-LIN. n. s. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLUENCE. n. s. [from fluere.] Copiousness; readiness. Not now in use.

Poetry indeed hath a fluence of expression.

Whitlock, Menn. of the Eng. (1654), p. 470.

FLUENCY. n. s. [from fluere.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, moralist, for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit.

Garth, Poet. to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick library must be caulked, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency.

Fing Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,

The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both.

Swift, Thoughts on various Subjects.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
— behold him lost on seas.

Sanders, Paraphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sanders.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Lat.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluid, but stiffied.

Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech.

Bacon.

And with most fluent utterance. Denham, Sophy.

FLUENT. n. s.

1. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death.

Philips.

2. In the doctrine of fluxions, flowing quantity.

They must know to find fluxions from fluxion.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 47.

FLUENTLY. adv. [from fluens.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

To speak divinely, or by inspiration, was the usual phrase whereby they expressed speaking fluently, pathetically, and with coherence.

Spenser, Ven. of Vulg. Prophesies, p. 74.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Lat. fluidus, Fr.]

Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow 'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wave by cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show 'r the earth?

Milton, P. L.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

Newton, Opticks.

FLUIDITY. n. s.

1. Any thing not solid.

The doctrine and laws of fluids are of the greatest extent in philosophy.

Chemists.

2. [In physics.] Any animal juice; as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Med. Scrib.

FLUIDITY. n. s. [fluiditas, Fr. from fluidus.]

The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies; it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.

Newton, Opticks.

A disease opposite to this spiritus is too great fluidity.

Arbuthnot.

FLUIDNESS. n. s. [from fluidus.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too?

Boyle.

FLUKE. See FLOOK and FLOWK. Both the fish, and the part of an anchor, are frequently written fluke.

FLUME. n. s. [Sax. plum; old Fr. flum, "flume, riviere," Lacombe. One also of our own oldest words. Lat. flumen.] A river. Obsolete.

They wereinhabited of him in the flume Jordan.

Wickliffe, R. Mark. I.

FLUMERY. n. s. [flumru, Welsh.]

1. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheateflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flumery are very fit for children.

Lace.

2. Flattery; either an enlargement of flam, or a figurative usage of the preceding meaning.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge their selves.

Addison on Italy.

FLUOR. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a flour, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Catamenia.

TO FLUR. See TO FLURRY.

FLURRY. n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. or German, flucht, hastily, in a hurry; or perhaps a corruption of fluster.]

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overtaken by a sudden flury of wind.

Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

One is kept in perpetual alarm, and flury of spirits, for the first or second time of assisting at this diversion, [a bull-fight.]

Swineburn, Trav. through Spain, L. 90.

TO FLURRY. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep in agitation; to alarm. Flur'd is an old northern word. "Flur'd, all ruffled." Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697, p. 98.

After so long a journey through the still wastes, and silent stupid towns of Spain, where every thing bears the mark of languor and indolence, we were at first quite flurr'd and confounded with the hurry in the garrison, the perpetual noise of cannon, and the reports of the soldiers going through their firing exercise.

Swineburn, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29. (1776.)

TO FLUSH. v. n. [fluyzen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or fluz, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the vessels, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, deth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Rey. It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To come in haste. Dr. Johnson here cites a passage from Ben Jonson, where the verb is active, in the sportsman's sense of springing birds. The following passage will explain the present meaning of coming in haste.

On your crush'd nostrils slake your opillation,
And make your prett powers flush to wholesome sweaters. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

3. To glow in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd.

Milton, P. L.
What means that lovely fruit? What means,
alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Johnson, Spring.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.
A flake of fire that, flushing in his beard,
Him all amad. Spenser.

TO FLUSH.† v. a.
1. To colour; to redden; properly to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charm.

Johnson, Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek.
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay, Trivia.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

Such things as can only feed his pride, and flush his ambition. South, Ser. iii. 104.

A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury, Sermon.

3. To put up; to spring.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
Each will 'em to flush
Each will out of his bush. Ben Jonson, Masque of Owls.

FLUSH.† adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of blood,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his sudit stands, who knows, save Heav'n? Shakespeare.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
Not prefining old rags with flush. Cleveland.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.

3. Conceited, elevated in opinion.
Content not yourselves with some part of it;
that you read the Gospel, or New Testament, but neglect the Old, as is the practice of some flush nominalists. Bayly, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 297.

FLUSH.† n. s. [German, flus.]
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
This is commonly corrupted to flush:
as, a flush of water.

Never had any man such a loss, cries a widow, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Extremé.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Rey.

Success may give him a present flush of joy;
but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers, Sermon.

2. Cards all of a sort. [Spanish, flus.]
3. Bloom; growth; abundance.

No busy steps the grass-green footway tread,
But all the flush of life is fled. Goldsmith.

A horse turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass. Steevens, Note on K. Lear.

4. A term for a number of ducks; as a covey is for partridges.

As when a falcon bath with nimble flight
Flows in a flush of ducks forby the brook,
The trembling flock from her antonying look
Do hide themselves from her antonying look Amongst the flags and covert round about.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 54.
FLU'SHER.* n. s. The common name of the lesser butcher-bird. Chambers.

FLU'SHING.* n. s. [from flush.] Colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To cover any pimples and heats, or to remove any obstructions, or to mitigate and quench excessive flushing. By. Taylor, Artific. Husband, p. 62.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush?
Calker of the Aspect.

FLU'SHNESS.* n. s. [from flush.] Freshness.
Whose interest it is, like burr-haws, to hide the meagerness of their bodies by the flushness of their feathers. By. Gendens's Life of Hooker, 1661, p. 37.

TO FLU'STER.† v. a. [from Flus.]
1. To make hot and rosy with drinking;
to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flusher'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. To confound; to hurry.
All disorders must be therefore used either to divert, blind, stupefy, flusher, and amuse the senses; or else to juggle them out of their stations.
Swift, Fragment.

TO FLU'STER.* v. n. [Teut. and Germ.
flugs, in a hurry; Icel. flas, precipi-tancy; and Serenim gives fleser, anhelus,
i. e. short-winded, out of breath.]

To be in a bustle; to make much ado about little.

The Apostle seems here most peculiarly to have directed this encomium of the gospel, as a defence to the philosophers of his time, the flushing, vain-glorious Greeks. South, Sermon, iii. 215.

FLU'STER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Sudden impulse; violent flow; hurry.

Let no present flusher of fortune, or flow of riches, either transport the man himself with confidence, or the fools about him with admiration.
South, Sermon, vi. 235.

When Caska adds to his natural impudence the flusher of a bottle, that which fools call fire when he was sober, all men abhor as outrageous when he is drunk. Taylor, No. 239.

FLU'STERED.* adj. [from flusher.] Heated with liquor; half-drunk.

Being pleased with two or three imaginary bumpers of different wines, equally delicious; and a little vexed with this fantastic treat; he pretended to grow flusher, and gave the Barne-side a good box on the ear. Addison, Guardian, No. 162.

FLUTE.† n. s. [flute, flute, French; fluyte, Dutch; flöte, Danish; Chaucer writes our word after this manner, "many a flöte." House of Fame, iii. 135; Germ.
flöte. The word may be either from the Gr. φλῶτα, to blow, or the Lat. flutula, a pipe.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of fates kept stroke. Dryden.

The soft complaining flute,
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute spile.

TO FLUTE.* v. n. To play on the flute.
Singing he was, or fluting all the day. Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

TO FLUTE.* v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

Channelled, fluted, furrowed, streaked.
Cogswell, in F. Conell, and Sherwood.

FLU'TER.* n. s. [Fr. fluteur.] One who plays on the flute. Cole, and Sherw.

TO FLUTTER.† v. n. [Jocose, Saxon;
flotter, French.] One who or what was formerly written floter, or flotter. As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flutere over her birds, and bereath them on her wings, &c. Dr. Plaisere's Nine Sermon.
1621; p. 106.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flutere over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut. xxxiii. 11.

Think you're an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Cresshaw.

They fed, and flut 'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it
fluter and froth high. Greene.

No rag, no scrap of all the beast or wit,
That once so flut'd, and that once so writ.
Pope, Dunciad.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flut'ring can be Zephyretta's care. Pope.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flut'ring sail to float in air. Pope, Odys.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly;
to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was won, and how long the flut'd under the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Hawes, Fies. For.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flut about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flut'ring dance!
Prior.

His thoughts are very flustering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

FLUXURE. n. s. [Lat. fluxus.]

1. The act or power of flowing.

Humour, we thus define flux,
To be a quality of air, or water,
And in itself holds these two properties,
Moisture and fluxure. J. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Fluid matter.

The swain fluxure of the clouds.

Dryden, Baron's War, li. 16.

TO FLY.† pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [aleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To fly is to escape, or to go away, clean, Saxon, and makes fled.] They are now confounded. Fly, or aleogan, are evidently from the Latin volo, to fly.

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cluster'd flight. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.

These men's business the warier sort of you do not commend; ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.

Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job, i.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tale, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it never looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The sunset with winning speed
Return, and through the city spread the news. Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the unsouth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whisks about. Dryd.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be window'd, where my chuff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He bosom heads, to pass his own made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

8. [clean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to fly, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense. See TO FLEE.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser, F. Q.

Ye shall fly, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.

Abishair escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sam. xxi. 20.

What wonder if the kindly bees be shed,
Revis'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.

He oft desire'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forsake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. TO FLY AT. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark at fly at him. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.

South, Sermon.
This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults.

10. To FLY at. To hawk; to catch birds by means of hawks.

Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook, I saw not better sport these seven years' day.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.
11. To FLY back. To start; to become restive, as a horse.

12. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face, and he must expect only danger to himself.

Swift, Drapier's Letters.
13. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:
— But how, if nature fly in my face first?
— Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden, Spens. Fr.

14. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary.

They have travel'd all the night! mean fetiches; The images of revolt and flying off. Shak. K. Lear.

Swift, Drapier's Letters.
Fly off at once with his Numidian horse.

15. To FLY on. To spring with violence upon; to fly at.

A servant that he bred, thrall'd with remorse, Oppos'd against the act, breathing his sword.

To his great master; who, though enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd his dead.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

16. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd, From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out in consummes, makes a noise and stinks.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.

17. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd; If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryd.

Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pagenities of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close interposed behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

18. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley, Sermon.

19. To FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'charged, lets fly, And buzzes, unsuining, in the rended sky.

Grinnell.

20. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

21. To float in the air; as they marched out of the town, by capitulation, with drums beating, colours flying, &c. i.e. with honour. Hence perhaps the vulgar expression, "to come off with flying-colours."

To FLY, v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;

Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.

Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean, Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physic in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly The sight of this horrid spectacle. Milton, S. A.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,

And his lion'd limbs are weary'd into rest, Then dreams invade. Dryden, Juv.

Nature flies him like enchanted ground.

Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Deceitful, to fly the Cretan shore, His heavy limbs on jointed pilans bore,

The first who sail'd in air. Dryden, Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth.

Fly every thing you see to the mark, and censure it freely. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady, Ind.

5. To cause to fly, or float in the air, as, to fly an artificial kite.

6. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escap: flew should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY, v. n. s. [fleege, pite, Saxon; fluga, Icel.]

1. A small winged insect of many species. As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;

The kill for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.

To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To heedless flies the window proves A constant death. Thomson, Summer.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Fifteen.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

4. A stage-coach, distinguished by this name, in order to impress a belief of its extraordinary quickness in travelling.

And bravely quell'd sedition's bus,

By dint of mussy fly-flaps.

Song of St. George for England.

FLYING-FISH, * n. s. [fly and fish.] A fish of the gurnard kind.

The greatest recreation we had, was to view such large shoals of flying fish, as, by their interposing multitude, for some time darkened the sun; a fish beautiful in its eye, the body, though no larger than a small herring, yet big enough for those complemental fins, which, so long as moist, serve as wings to fly 200 paces or more, and 40 foot high.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

FOAL, * n. s. [M. Goth. fula; Su. Goth. fola; Sax. fol, pole.] Our old authors write the word fola. The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen.

The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and filly for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind.
Spenser, F. Q.

Twenty asses and ten foals. Gen. xxxi. 15.
To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare, Timon.

What a board of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits is wonderful. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

Cesar fell down at the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

To Pallas high the foaming bowl he crown'd,
And sprinkl'd large libations on the ground. Pope, Odyssey.

Upon a foaming horse
There follow'd strait a man of royal port. Rome.

2. To be in rage; to be violently agitated. He foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth. St. Mark, ix. 18.

FO'AMINGLY. adv. [from foaming.] Slaveringly; frothily. Cotgrave in P. Baveusement, and Sherwood.

FO'AMY. adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.

More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace. Sidney.

Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the juster side. Dryden.

FOB. n. s. [from fupsack, German.] A small pocket.

Who pick'd a fob at holding forth. Hudibras.

When were the dice with more profusion thrown? The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone.

He put his hand into his fob, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper. Addison, Spect.

Two pockets he called his fobs; they were two large silks squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Swift.

Orphans around his bed the lawyer sees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fob. Swift.

To FOB. v. a. [from fuppen, German.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself
fob'd in it. Shakespeare, Othello.

Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fob'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father ancient the law. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He goes prancing forward, till he was fobbed again with another story. L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale. Shakespeare, Coriol.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fob'd off so. Hudibras.

By a Ravana vianner once betry'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchase'd liquor mine,
The racial fob'd me off with only wine. Addison.

Being a great lover of country sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fob'd off with a garter. Addison, Freeholder.

FO'CAL. adj. [from foculus.] Belonging to the focus. See Focus.

Schellhammer demands whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them. Derham, Physico-Theology.

FO'CILL. n. s. [focille, French; originally an Arabic expression for the two bones of the arm and leg here named.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle; or elbow and wrist.

The fracture was of both the foci of the left leg. Wiseeman, Surgery.

FOCILLA'TION. n. s. [focilli, Lat.] Comfort; support. Dict.

FOCUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. [In optics.] The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concurrence, where the rays meet and cross the axis
after their refraction by the glass. Harris.

The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus. Newton, Opticks.

2. Focus of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and distant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter, or latus rectum. Harris.

3. Focus of an Ellipsis. A point towards each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, shall be together equal to that longer axis. Harris.

4. Focus of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the opposite hyperbolas; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the opposite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis. Dict.

FO'DDER. n. s. [Sax. foðen, foðob, from foðan, to feed; Su. Goth. foda, to feed; Irish, foder, straw; Icel. foder, food for cattle. See FOTHER.] Dry food stored up for cattle against winter.
The cattle, starving for want of fodder, corrupted
the air. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land
by a necessity of fodder. Temple.

Of grass and fodder thus defraud'd the clans,
And of their mother's dugs the starving lambs. Dryden, Virg.

To FO'DDER. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.

Natural earth is taken from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddred on. Evelyn's Kalendar.

From winter keep
Well foddred in the stalls, thy tender sheep. Dryden, Virg.

A farm of fifty pound hath commonly three barns, with as many cowyards to fodder cattle in. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Straw will do well enough to fodder with. Mortimer.

FO'DDERER. n. s. [Sax. foðene.] He who foddres cattle. Sherwood.

FOE. n. s. [Sax. pah, an enemy; perhaps from pian, to hate; fæ, Scottish.
Runick pah, secret hatred; Cimbr. faide, enmity; Icel. faide; Goth. faht. Hence our foe; to which likewise foe-hood is akin; a word which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. Foe is our ancient plural of foe, and often occurs in the poetry of Spenser.]

1. An enemy in war.

Here he had established his throne,
He fought great battles with his savage foes,
In which he then defeated every foe. Spenser, F. Q.

Never but one more was either like
To meet so great a foe. Milton.

2. A persecutor; an enemy in common life.

God's benison go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakespeare.

Forc'd by thy worth, thy foe in death becomes,
Thy friend has lodg'd thee in a costly tomb. Dryden, Fob.

They desires to know,
Make use of every friend, and every foe. Pope.

3. An opponent; an ill-wisher.

He that considers and enquires into the reason of things, is counted a foe to received doctrines.

To FOE. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat
as an enemy. Not now in use.

In his power she was to foe or friend.

FO'HEED. n. s. [Sax. pah and hab, the quality, condition, or character of a foe.] Enmity.

Have you forgotten S. Hierome's and Russin's deadly froth which was rung over the world? By. Birkb. Cop. of Cert. Letters.

FO'HEED. n. s. [from foe and man, Sax.
pahmon.] Enemy in war; antagonist.

An obsolete word, Dr. Johnson says.
Some poets of the present time have en-deavour'd to re-establish this word, which once indeed was common.

Here haunts that fiend, and does his daily spoil;
Therefore benevolence be at your keeping will,
And ever ready for your foemen fell. Spenser, F. Q.

What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

When by report of subjects I had heard
How foemen were arrived on my shore,
I gathered all my soldiers word of foe. Mirror, for Mag. p. 17.

Art not cunning shall lack,
To preserve thee, still to keep,
What thy envious femur seek.

Benson, and Fl. Women Pleas'd.

FOETUS. n. s. [Latin.] The child in the womb after it is perfectly formed; but before, it is called embryo. Quincy.

A fetus, in the mother's womb, differs not from the state of a vegetable. Locke.

FOG. n. s. [Ice.] fog, Dan. fog, a storm, a fall of snow, snow driven by the wind. It seems to be connected with the Lat. fuligo, a mist, darkness. A thick mist; a moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.

Infect her beauty,

You fenuck'd fogs drawn by the pow'ful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered
Greece with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence by away;
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow.

Crashaw.

Fogs we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months. Howland, Nat. Hist.

Foe. n. s. [fogagium, low Latin. "Grass in the foresta regis locatur pro fogagio." Leges Forest. Scotice.] Aftergrass; grass which grows in autumn after the hay is mown. A common word in the north.

The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother blades. Dryden, Polyd., S. 13.

To Fou. v. a. [from the noun.] To overcast; to darken; "to fog over."

Sherwood.

To FOG. v. n. [Fr. vogue, sway, authority; voguer, to go forward.] To have power; to practice. Hence our word pettifogger, one who has little influence, practice, or power. The present word has hitherto been unobserved.

The fogging proctorage of money.

Milton, of Reformation in Eng. B. 2.

He gives himself up wholly to scrape a livelihood from curing diseases, or fogging in secular causes. Hector's Life of Aps. Williams, p. 28.

FO'GAGE. n. s. [low Lat. fogagium.] In the forest law, rank grass, not eaten in the summer. Chambers.

FO'GGILY. adv. [from foggy.] Mistily; darkly; cloudily.

FO'GGINESS. n. s. [from foggy.] The state of being dark or misty; cloudiness; mistiness.

Your purity shall exceed the lazy dulness and useless fogginess of many of them amidst their poverty. Bp. Gauden, Hieropates, 1655, p. 560.

FO'GGY. adj. [from fog.] 1. Misty; cloudy; dank; full of moist vapours.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive.
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.

And Phobos flying so, most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies.
And hides for shame. Spenser.

Whence have they this mettle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

As cleave Phobus, when more foggy cloud
His bright countenance from the world a while doth shroud,
Both by degrees begin to show his light. Brown.

Let not the air be subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining.

Watson, Architecture.

About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants.

Evelyn's Calendar.

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

I will pass over your coarse, foggy, drowsy conceits, that there are few or none simple monarchies in the world.

Harwood, Ans. to DeMaupe, [1603,] p. 35.

FOM. interj. [from fab, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence; as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own clime, complexion and degree,
Where to we see in all things nature tends,
Fol! / one may smell in such a wit most rank,
Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural.

Shakespeare, Othello.

FO'IBLE. adj. [French, foible; Ital. foevole; probably from the Lat. febilis, to be lamented.] Our word is now used perhaps only as a substantive, signifying defect, a weak side; but is no doubt adopted from the adjective, though our lexicographers have thought the adjective unworthy of any notice, in the sense formerly used by fencers; foible being the word for the weakest part of a blade, in contradistinction to fort, the strongest. Weak.

The fencing-masters, when they presort a foyle or fleuret to their scholars, tell him it hath two parts; one of which he callith the fort or strong, and the other the foyle or weak.

FO'IBLE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.

His knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foibles, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

To FOIL. v. a. [from foiler, to wound, old French.]

1. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

Amasaesent's id.

The rebel thrones; but greater grace to see
Tins fall'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foild.
His knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foibles, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

2. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

The rebel thrones; but greater grace to see
Tins fall'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foild.
His knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foibles, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

3. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

The rebel thrones; but greater grace to see
Tins fall'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foild.
His knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foibles, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

4. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

The rebel thrones; but greater grace to see
Tins fall'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foild.
His knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physics.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foibles, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

5. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

The rebel thrones; but greater grace to see
Tins fall'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Which but th' omnipotent none could have foild.
His knew the foibles of human nature.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whit! I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both series, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase.

Addison.

FOIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

Of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Whosoever overthrew his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is called a foil.

Curry.

So after many a foil the templer proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall.

Milton, P. L.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southey.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foil.

Dryden.

2. [from feuille, French, folium, Lat.] Leaf; gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foil all over them display'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fame is no place that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foil,
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies.

Milton, Lycidas.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve.

Sidney.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The sullen passage of thy woary steps
Enters a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy name.

Shakespeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre; the foil is a mixture of mastic and burnt ivory.

Grew, Muscum.

Hector has a foil to set him off: we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector.

Brown on the Odyssey.

4. [from foillier, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

5. The steel of a looking-glass. [French, feuille, leaf; Lat. folium.] Sherwood.

Foil, among looking-glass-grinders, is a sheet of tin with quicksilver, or the like, laid on the back-side of a looking-glass, in make it reflect. Chambers.

FO'ILABLE. adj. [from foil.] That may be foiled; reusable; rejectible.

Colgrave in F. Revestable, & Sherwood.

FO'ILER. n. s. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

FO'ILING. n. s. Among hunters, the mark, barely visible, where deer have passed over grass.

To FOIN. v. n. [from joindre, French, joindre, Lat.] To push in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and join'd, and thunder'd blows,

And every way did seek into his life;
No place, no mail, could ward so mighty throws;
But yielded passage to his cruel knife. Spens. F. Q.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out:
He will join like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child. Shaks. Hen. IV.
He was fain to defend himself from the bear,
A great while, the bear continually joining at him with his great tusks. Cæcilius, Life of Wolsey.

Then loath, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lash, they join, they pass, they strive to bore
Their comrades, and the thinnest parts explore. Dryden.

TO FOIN.* v. a. To prick; to sting.

Hulot, and Barret.

FOIN.† n. s. [from the verb.] A thrust; a push.

At hand strokes they use not swords, but pollaxes, which are mortal as well in sharpness as in weight, both for fencers and down strokes.

Robinson, Treatise of Man's Weapons, (1551), ch. 10.
Come, no matter var your fous. St. K. Lear.
I had my wards, and fous, and quarter-bows.
Win. Wom. of Hageden, (1638).

FOININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

FOISON.† n. s. [old French, foison, (for there is no such Sax. word, I think, as foison, given by Dr. Johnson,) from foisonner, to abound. It may be from the Lat. fusus, copious; or, as Menage says, from fusio.] Plenty; abundance. A word now out of use, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still used in several countries.

For justly thy riches, whatsoever they be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee.

Tuam.

Be wilful to kill, and unwilling to store,
And look not for foison, I tell thee before. Tuam.

Nature should bring forth
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shaks. Tempest.

As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison, so her plentiful womb
Expresseth his full till and bounty.

Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

TO FOIST.† v. a. [fauister, French.] To insert by forgery; to falsify. It appears to have been adopted from the practice of gamblers; to foist or cog a die," Barret's Aliv. 1580; "to foist or cog," Sherwood's Dict. 1632.

Least negligence or partiality might admit or fast in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings.

Corpus, Stat. of Cornwall.

Forge law, and foist it into some by-place
Of some old rotten rail. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

TO FOIST.* v. n. To stink; to be fusty. It is the same as fust, which see; and also foistied. It is sometimes written fist, as in Hollyband's old French Grammar.

FOIST.* n. s. [old Fr. fuste, a foist, a light galley.] Cotgrave; perhaps from the Lat. fustis, in the sense of wood.

"A fuste seu ligno dicta navis species, quam vulgo fiste dicimus; nam et naves nudæ ligna vocantur." See Dr. Cuvæ in V. FUSTA.] A light and swift ship.

Brown, and Fl. Turner Tamed.

FOISTER.* n. s. [from To foist.] A falsifier; "a liar." Sherwood.

These able are at need to stand and keepe the stake,
When fagging foisters, fit for Thorne fraile,
Are food-sick, faisi; or, heart-sick, run to waies.

Mir. for Mag. p. 483.
FOISTIED.* adj. [F. fustic.] Mustied; winowed.

Hulot.

FOISTINESS. n. s. [from foisty.] Fustiness; mouldiness.

Dress mustard, and lay it in cellar up sweet,
Least foistiness make it for table unmeet. Tuam.

FOISTY.* adj. [F. fustic.] See FUSTY.

Mouldy; fusty.

The old moethosen, legend legend; and the foisty and fenowed festival.

Favour, Anty, Triumph over Novelty,

(1619), p. 334.

FOLD.† n. s. [Sax. falab, falb, from the Goth. foldan, to fold up. "Huc pertinent illud falb, vcl falb, quod Anglo-saxonibus olim denotabat stabulum, propriè verò septem ex stipitibus cratibusque in terram defixis complicatisque factum." Jun. Gloss. Goth. in V. FALDEN.]

1. The ground in which sheep are confined.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and till'd; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheep-walks and folds. Milton, P. I.

In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient folds Slain. Milton, Sonnet.

2. The place where sheep are housed.

Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep. Numb. xxiii. 24.
Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complice of cures to come. Raleigh.

3. The flock of sheep.

And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yearning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my falling fold. Dryden, Virg.

4. A limit; a boundary.

Secure from meeting, yet're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold. Cæcili.

So many folds of favour. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, beset with gums.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Proned on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd

Fold above fold, a surging mass! Milton, P. I.

Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large; the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd beholds
The glories of death, with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden, Virg. Æn.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different.

Arbuthnot.

7. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition.

Fold signifies the same quantity added; as, two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold; some sixty fold, some thirty fold. St. Matt. xiii. 8.

At last appear
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roar,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brass.

Three times three of adamantine rock. Milt. P. L.
Their martyr'd blood and ashes saw
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth wave
The triple tyrant, that from them may grow
A hundred fold. Milton, Sonnet.

TO FOLD.† v. a. [Goth. foldan; Sax. fealban.]

1. To shut sheep in the fold.

The use that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heav'n doth double. Milt. Comus.
See in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryd. Hor.

2. To double; to complicate.

As a venture shall thou fold them up. Heb. i. 12.
Yes a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. Prov. vi. 10.

and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue.
Newton, Opticks.

FOLIA'TION. n. s. [foliatio, folium, Lat.]
1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these being tender and pulpy, and coming forth in the spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE.† n. s. [from folium, Latin.]
The state of being hammered into leaves.

Dict.

They wrestled together a foliature of the fig-tree. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 203.
FO'LIER. * n. s. [Dutch, foel; French,
feuille.] Goldsmith's foil.

ceptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.

Brown, Purg. Err.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pec-uliaris, &c. Quincy.

FO'LLUL. * adj. [folly and full.] Full of folly. This is an old Scotch expression; and is an English vulgarism.
The common people call wit, mirth; and fancy,
folly; fanciful and follyful they use indiscrimi-nately. Shakespeare.

FO'LLULE. * adv. [from folly.] Foolishly.
Obscure. Used both by Wicliffe and Chaucer.

To FOLLLOW.† v. a. [folgan, Saxon;
volgen, Dutch; folgen, Goth. to follow.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Him all his train

Follow'd to bright procession to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might.

Milton, P. L.

What could I do,
But follow strait, inevitably thus led. Milton, P. L.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where rocks felt thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death

1 follow'd him by groans of dying folk. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
God is as here, and will be found alike
Present, and of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round

With goodness and paternal love, his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. P. L.

Milton, P. L.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless away,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merrill.

Sidney.

Some pious tears the playing hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade.

Dryden, En.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue.

Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be registered,
Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll.

Milton, P. L.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year.

Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And ventures, if that fail them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds or pain. Milton, P. L.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancient
And better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse,
we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love.

Hooker.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

9. To obey; to observe as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians.

Tillotson.

Most men admire

Milton, P. R.

Virtue, who follow not her lore
Fair virtue, should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone,
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one.

Swyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.
Follow peace with all men. Herbert, xii. 14.

Follow not that which is evil. 3 John, ver. 11.

11. To conform by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.
They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility.

Spenser on Ireland.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.
He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits.

Ecclesi. xix. 9.

To FOLLOW.† v. n.

1. To come after another.

The famine shall follow close after you.

Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow

B. Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion.

That in the nature of their lords rebels;

As knowing naught, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To be posterior in time.

Living carcasses design'd

For death, the following day, in bloody fight.

Milton, P. L.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.
If he neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miserrand that follow on it must be imputed to his own election.

Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow.

Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes doubts, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country.

Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power.

Locke.

6. To continue endeavour; to persevere.
Then shall we know, if we follow no to know the Lord;

Hos. vi. 5.

FO'LLOWER.† n. s. [from follow; Sax. folcwe.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spur'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes.

Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide.

South, Sermon.

3. An attendant or dependant.
No follower, but a friend.

Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?

— With Poins, and other his continual followers.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Grief is an impudent guest,

A follower every where.

Beaumont, and Fl. Z. of Corinth.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law.

Spencer on Ireland.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,

To leave his followers on a foreign coast.

Dryden, Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ.

1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Spence, Sermon.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have.

Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their King and their Master.

Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,

Fuller of God, or friend of human kind,

Poet or patriot, rose but to restore

The faith and moral nature gave before.

Pope, Essay.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FO'LLY.† n. s. [old Fr. folle; Welsh, fol.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly, childhood's guide,

This childhood at her side.

Hawthornth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.
She hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house.

Deut. xxi. 21.

They have committed lawlessness and folly in Israel.

Judges, xii. 6.

Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak,

When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness hois bound, when majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see

The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush

To see us thus transformed to a boy.

Shakespeare.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot.

Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grave and ease,

Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please.

Pope, Horace.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,

Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead.

Arbuthnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their giving, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children.

Watson.

Blame them thyself, as reason's law requires,

Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires.

Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them.

Locke.

FOMENTATION.† n. s. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours.

Quincy.

Fomentation calleth forth the humour of vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humour out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Excitation; encouragement.

This gentleman leaveth Italy in present tranquillity, though not without a little fear of some alteration on the side of Savoy: which prince seemeth to have great and unquiet thoughts; and I fear, they will lack no fomentation from abroad.

Sir H. Watson, Lett. Rom. p. 276.

And dive in science for distinguished names, Dishonest fomentation of your pride!

Young, Night Th. 5.

FOMENTER.† n. s. [from foment.] One that foment; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up.

Howell.

The kinder, fomenters, and advancers of the whole German war.

Recalling of the Peace of Germany, (1655), p. 113.

A perpetual fomentor and nourisher of sin.

Hale, Sermon, end of his Remains, p. 25.

FON.† n. s. [a word used by Chaucer for a fool, which Mr. Tyrwhitt designates as Saxon; but, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, there is no similar word in that language. "It is," he observes, "the same with the Su. Goth. faana, and Icel. faanc, status; whence faana, faanafti, fatuë se gerere; Su. Goth. faanig, delirus, stultus; Icel. fangar, homo nihili; Germ. faunzen, faunzen, agere. Perhaps this is the origin of the English fool, and also of fun, sport." But see FUN.

Wicliffe, it may be added, uses fanned for foolish. We have also, in our old language, the term fond-plough, a kind of plough.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon, Than loves the thing he cannot purchase.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FOND.† adj. [fon, Scottish; a word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology; to fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish. So far Dr. Johnson. See however, the etymology of the preceding word, fon.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent injudicious.

That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard.

Hooker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. Ascham.

Tell these and women,
'Tis fond to wait inevitable strokes,
'As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shaks. Timon.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shaks.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. De Witt.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to learn while I relate;
Fond I were not in hope of thy reply. Milton, P. L.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite.

'Twas not revenge for grief'd Apollo's wrong
Thou see'st ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infatuations. Dryden, Tycor. Love.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.
Not with fond shackles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Stoddard, Meas. for Meas.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.
I'm a foolish fond wife. Ascham.

Like Venus I'll shine,
Be fond and be fine. Ascham.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted; with of.

Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen sent,
My pictures, medals, books complete at once.
Some are so fond to know a great deal of art,
And love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts on the Mind.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the adjective.]
To FONDLE. } To treat with great indulgence; to caress; to coddle.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond as is the forward child of love. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fondle there on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constraints,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryden, Rinaldo.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this fudge? My master loves her dearly;

And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakspeare.

To FOND. v. n. [Sax. funbanian.] To strive; to try. Obsolete.

Though I acknowledge have upon bonds,
And long have had, yet will I fonde
To make a boke after his bestie. Gower, Conf. Am. Prud.

I will fonde to espouse on my side,
To whom I may be wedded lawfully. Chaucer, March. Tale.

FO'NDLER. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FO'NDLING.† n. s. [from fondle.]

1. A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Quyte you well in field and town,
And of all the fondlings make a deliverance. Mystery of Condemned-Days, (1612.)

Partially in a parent is commonly unlucky;
for fondlings are in danger to be made fools; and the children that are least coddled make the best and wisest men. L'Estrenge.

The best of our own minds may favour any opinion of action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any lady may 'rears;
Cock'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

2. A fool. Yet so much I believe, in the world of England.

We have many such fondlings, that are their wives' packhorses and slaves. Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 603.

FO'NDREY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shakespeare, Hen. 11.

Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man. Shakespeare, Rich. 11.

Picinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly bro'd of their fate. Philips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind;
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Arcturi's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

E'en before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Smugge.

FO'NDNESS.† n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgement.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Symonds, Sonnets.

So many absurd and indeed ridiculous consequences do follow the fondness of this argument. Sp. Taylor, Artif. Handson. p. 55.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison, Cato.

Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phillips, Distrest Mother.

Corinna, with that youthful air,

Is thirry and a bit to spare;
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and sweet fruits of this change. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Not that he had any fondness to the number itself. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 245.

FONTANGE.† n. s. [from the name of the first wearer, Dr. Johnson says.

This was Mademoiselle de Fontange, one of the French king's mistresses; as the amusing Pop-Dictionary of 1690 informs us.] A knot of ribbons on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

These old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head; they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hang down their backs. Addison.

FOOD.† n. s. [Sax. fōd, food; fēan, to feed; Goth. fōdins, food; Su. fōda, to nourish; Dutch, voeden, to feed; Scottish, feed.]

1. Actuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me rainment, bed, and food. Shakespeare.

Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prior, xvii. 23.

Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou could'st art not seen
At heav'n's high feasts! have fed. Milton, P. L.

They give us food, which may with necer use,
And was that does the absent sun supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.

Give me some music: music, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

To Food.† v. a. [voeden, Dutch; fōda, Su. fēan, Sax.] To feed. Obsolete.

Where's my knave, my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester.

Milton.

In this disguise sit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat.

Denham.

5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool.

Bulwer.

6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.

I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

1 Sam. xvi. 21.

Well, then we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It is worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self?

Locke.

7. To make a fool of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-lungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Shakespeare, Tw. Niv. 1.

To FOOL, v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave.

Herbert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not.

De Witt.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age: and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other.

L'Estrange.

It must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.

L'Estrange.

This is a time for fooling? Dryden, Spem, Fears.

To FOOL, v. a.

1. To treat with content; to disappoint;
to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

His over-weaning
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting.

Milton, P. L.

If men loved to be deceived and fool'd about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that,
which can be known only from their own heart.

Smith, Sermon.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool with hope, men favour the devil.

Dryden.

I'm strid with waiting for this chemic gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.

Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fool'd and imposed upon.

Johnson, Freckler.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much,
To bear it tamely.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause;
This but thy judgment fools the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray.

Ben Jonson.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's no fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it.

Denham, Solys.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures;
I will no longer be fool'd or imposed upon by them.

Calamy, Sermon.

A boar of Holland, whose ears of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty.

Temple.

3. To cheat; as, to fool one of his money.

FOOL*, n. s. [probably from fouler, Fr.]

A liquid made of gooseberries scalded and pounded, and of cream.

*Thou full dish of fool. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.*

Fall to your cheesecakes, curds, and clouted cream.

*Your fool, your flawes. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.*

FOOLBOLD, adj. [fool and bold.] Foolish bold; foolhardy. Not now in use.

*Some in corners have been foolbold.*

Conclat. of Leland's Journey, enlarged by Bale.

L. 3. b.

FOOLBORN, adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

FOOLERY, n. s. [*from *fool.] 1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
He keeps the house of pride and foolery.

Boam. and Fl. Sen. Curate.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.

Talk not much with a fool, and go not to him that hath no understanding. Beware of him, lest thou have trouble; and thou shalt never be defiled with his fooleries.

Ecclesi. xiii. 13.
I shall do that that's fit, sir;
And fit to cross your fooleries.

Boam. and Fl. The Pilgrim.
It is meet foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words.

Watts.

3. Object of folly.

That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected.

Raleigh, Hist.
We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise.

FOOLHARTY, adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies far under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to befall;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares
To joy at his foolhappyness overnight.

F. Q.

FOOLHARDINESS, n. s. [from foolhardy.]
The old French language has the similar expression of fol hardement for temerity or imprudence. Chaucer uses folehardiness for rashness. Mad rashness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness.
Lauren and Dryden are foolhardy in too far, our Virgil never.

A false glowing parasite would call this foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly.

Smith, Sermon. ii. 347.

FOOLHARDISE, n. s. [fool and hardisee, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wise in works he was.

And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern metacolly did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass.

Spenser, F. Q.

FOOLHARDY, adj. [fool and hardy.] Old French also fol-hardi, Rog. Gloss.
Suppl.] Daring without judgment;
madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little tube rev'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels.

Hewell.

If any yet be so foolhardy,
I'll expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a mistim.

Hudibras.

FOOLTRAP, n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in; as a flytrap.

Bets, at first, were fooltraps, where the wise
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies.

Dryden.

FOOLISH, adj. [*from *fool.]

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

Thou foolish woman, seest thou not our mourning.

2 Esdras.

Pray do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man;

I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.

We are come off

Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.

It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 35.

What could the best perform alone,
If all their fricoidly aids were gone?

A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.

He allows himself in foolish hairends and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself. Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.

FOOLISHLY, adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our winter suns bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Suff.

FOOLISHNESS, n. s. [from foolish.]

1. Folly; want of understanding.
2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.
Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

FOOLSCAP Paper. A term denoting the weight of the sheet of paper; as, pot, foolscap, &c. pot being the smallest, and foolscap the second in the ascending scale to atlas-paper.

FOOLSTONES, n. s. A plant.

FOOT † n. s. plural feet. [from Sax. voet,
Dutch; fute, Scottish; fatus, Goth. fat, Iceland. "Antiquissimum esse vocem conprobat omnium dialect. Scythio-Scand. convenientia." Serenius.]

1. The part upon which we stand.

The queen that bore thee,
Oh'er upon her knees than on her foot,
Died ev'ry day the liv'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
His affection to the church was so notorious,
That he never deserted it till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot; as, the foot of a table.

3. The lower part; the base.

Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.
Fretting, by little and little, washes away and cuts out both the tops, and sides, and feet of mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

4. The end; the lower part.

What dismal cries are those?
— Nothing; a trifling sound of misery.
New added to the foot of thy account;
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and borne away. Dryden, Cleomen.

5. The act of walking.

Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. 2 Mac. v. 21.

6. On FOOT. Walking; without carriage. Written sometimes o'foot, whence a'foot. See A'foot.

Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot. Ex. xii.

7. A posture of action.

The centurions and their charges billeted already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. Shakespeare.

8. Infantry; footmen in arms. In this sense it has no plural.

Lusius gathered three score thousand choice men of foot, and five thousand horsemen. 1 Mac. ii. 28.
Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.
Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sun behind, our enemies before. Dryden, Bn.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are out upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England.

Suff. Drap. Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negrees, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no well wisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Suff.

I ask whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed? Suff.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the follow- ing phrase. See A'foot.

Such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated.

Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon, Ent.

13. A certain number of syllables consti- tuting a distinct part of a verse.

For, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame.

Achom, Schoolmaster.

Did'st thou hear these verses?
— O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakespeare.

And Sydney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.
Pope.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Green.

15. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the church.

L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches; supposed to be the length of a man's foot.

When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

To FOOT, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.

Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That fast; footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to lead,
Half flying and half footing in his hate. Spenser, F. Q.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieve do foot
by night. Shakespeare.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed
it himself. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden, Span. Prior.
With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over that or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such pretended saint. South.

To FOOT, v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You, that would your rheum upon my head, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakespeare.

For there the pride of all her heart will bow,
When you shall foot her from your no, not the you.

Bacon, and Fl. W. at Mr. Wagon.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What could'st thou do with the traitors last footed in the kingdom? Shakespeare, A. Lear.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world;
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And anyest then, witch, away she right. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they feastly foot the green. Tickell.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing Herbert. He had forgotten Shakespeare.

The holy eagle

Stoop'd, as to foot us. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, bave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

5. To supply with feet.

New spur-stallions, or stockings by this time footed. Rp. Hall, Character. The Fair-Clown.

FOOTBALL, n. s. [from foot and ball.]

A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cascd with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shaks.

Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.
Peuchen.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Wallar.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Misc. Scrib.

FOOTBANDS.* n. s. pl. [foot and band.]

Soldiers that march and fight on foot.

T' whom valiant Audie, in their true recoyle,
" With his foot-bands alone did give the foyle.

Mar. for Mag. p. 805.

FOOTBOY. n. s. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,

This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy

At chamber-door? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things.

Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to us of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Suff.

FOOTBREADTH.* n. s. [foot and breadth.]

The space which a foot might cover.

I will not give you of their land, no so much as a footbreadth; [in the margin, the treading of the sole of the foot.] Deut. ii. 5.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. s. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, till he broke that which would have borne a bigger burden.

Sidney.

FOOTCLOTH.* n. s. [foot and cloth.]

A sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a

sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a

sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a

sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a

sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a

the tract of animals, and is most successful, when the tract is recent, i. e.
when the footsteps of the animal are as it were hot. Not now in use.

And forthwith anon fet-hote

He stole the cow. Greene, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Constantly have they taken anon foot-hote.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

FOOTING. n. s. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;

As full of peril and adreventous spirit

As to o'walk a current, roaring loud,

On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,

Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.

In accents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Hollier, Elem. of Speech.

2. Support; root.

Set closed stakes; and, wond'rous to behold,

Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,

And the dry poles produce a living race.

Dryden, Virg.

3. Basis; foundation.

All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered.

Locke.

4. Place; possession.

Whether they unctuous exhalations are,

Fix'd by the sun, or seeming to soar,

Or each some more remote and slippery star,

Which looms footing when to mortals shew u. Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward mov'd his footing old,

So backward still was turned his wrinkled face.

Spenser.

I would outnig you did nobody come:

But hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Break off, break off; I feel the different sound

Of some chaste footing near about this ground.

Milton, Comus.

6. Dance.

Make holiday: your ryestraw hats put on

And these fresh nymphs encounter every one

In country footing. Shakespeare, Tempest.

7. Steps; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his aid

name. Spenser on Ireland.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root;

or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon, Hen. VII.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect

the conquest. Davies.

The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clorenson.

No useful art have yet found footing here;

But all untaught and savage dogs appear.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

9. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arbutnot.

FOOTLESS.* adj. Without feet; feetless.

SEE FEETLESS.

FOOTLICKER. n. s. [foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks

the foot.

Do that good mischief which may make this island

Thine own for ever; and I, thy Callian,

For thy footlicker. Shakespeare, Tempest.

FOOTMAN. n. s. [foot and man.]

1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. A low menial servant in livery.

He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.

Like footmen running before coaches, Prior.

To tell the Inn what lord approaches.

3. One who practices to walk or run.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. s. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers espousing this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Heyward.

Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Etrange.

FOOTMANSTLE.* n. s. [foot and manstle.]

A species of petticoat such as is used to this day by market-women, when they ride on horseback, to keep their gowns clean. Obsolete.

A fat-nanted about her hipper large.

Chaucer's Wife of Bath, Prod. C. T.

FOOTPACE. n. s. [foot and pace.]

1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after a ground or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Moxon.

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.

FOOTPAD. n. s. [foot and pad. See PAD.]

A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.

FOOTPATH. n. s. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?

— Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FOOTPOST. n. s. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.

For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare

weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FOOTSOLDIER.* n. s. [foot and soldier.]

A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

FOOTSTALL. n. s. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.

FOOTSTEP. n. s. [foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-sighted reason wisdom's judgement leads,

And sense, her vassal, in her foot-steps treads.

Denham.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where-ever he has the foot-steps of others to follow. Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible foot-steps of Divine Wisdom and Benevolence. Brantley, Serm.

3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. s. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,

And made our foot-stool of security. Shaks. Hen. VI.

For whose sacred office 'tis to bring

Kings to obey their God, and men their king.

By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men in the footstool of the Deity. Denham, Sophy.
Let echoing anthers make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne.

Raccommen.
By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.

FOP† n. s. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Others think it derived from Horace's vappa, a foolish fellow; which is adopted from veppa, wine that has lost its flavour, evaporated. Serenius proposes the Icelandic hwopra, levity.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an imperitinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and waks. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
When such a positive chance of fop
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Raccommen.
The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.

L'Entranger.
In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with every wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOP'DDLE. n. s. [A fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noodle,
And banded you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.
FOP'LING.† n. s. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

They wrack in Chloë's toilet gain a part,
And, with his tailor, share the fopling's heart. Tickell.

Intrusion with a fopling's face,
Ignorant of time and place.

Crusier, Ode on Solitude.

FOP'PERY.† n. s. [from fop.] 1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeit of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sea, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

And as my satire bursts again,
See feather'd foppery strew the plain. Steuart.
Cambrics, lace, velvets, and many other prohibited fopperies. Guthrie.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and mode of dance,

Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FOP'PISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace to a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet. Gerrh.
The Romans grew extremely apish and foppish, so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbustnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt.

FOP'PISHLY.† adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously. Sherrwood.

FOP'PININESS.† n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity. Sherrwood.

I have seen parts of dress, in themselves extremely beautiful, which at the same time subject the wearer to the character of foppiness and affectation. Sherrwood.

FOR† prep. [fop, Saxon; voor, Dutch, faur, Gothic. Skinner and Tyrwhitt derive it from the Latin pro; Junius, from the Greek pro; changing pro into f, and transposing the letter r. Mr. Horne Tooke believes it to be no other than the Gothic substantive fairina, cause; and contends, that cause is the real single meaning which belongs to the several instances adduced. See Div. of Purley, i. 567—590.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooder.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakespeare.

An astrologer saith, if we were not for vain things that are constant, an individual would last out of moment.

The governor, rallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Andelst, Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Andelst.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Suckling.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickedler for hoping. Hammond, Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, were then so low that the inward sense lay low, and they would no longer be aware of use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suffer'd death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suffer'd grief
Rear'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryden, Virg.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn't his imperial throne,
Shriek'd for the dowfall in a doubtful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the carcases of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world; he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst, you could not think,
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out. Shakespeare, Coriol.

A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poesy was,
For all the world, like currier's poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shaks.

For all the world,
As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Ess.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the political. Bacon, Ess.

Consent are rather gazed upon than wisdom, considered in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Ess.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Valter.
He said these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.
Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's commands. Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue in the throne. Dryd. Tyr. Lav.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryd. Ess.

After death, we spirits have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk more insects, yet in mischief met. Tate, Jahn.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually tops them.

Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.
Lo some are rellum, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are woe.

Pope.
3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Maramadul's general, they had no just cause to mislike him, being an old captain of great experience.

Knots.
4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman.

A. Philop.

Say, it is fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter.

1. In this field, should die for a deserter?

Goy.

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Now, nor for sure, deliverance is at hand;
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd.

Milton, P. R.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And bounding, o'er the pomel cast the knight:
Fore and he flew, and piching on his hand,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

Dryd.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears

For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worse,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.

Milton, P. L.

The council-table and state-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

Clarendon.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself; but is a shrewd thing to an orchard.

Bacon.

He refused not to die for those whom killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that split it.

Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd?

Dryden, Spem. Friar.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling.

Swift.

8. To conduce to; beneficial.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate.

Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison, Spect.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru, for China and Japan.

Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.

Tillotson.

16. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion; nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.

Locke.

17. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors.

Bp. Taylor.

18. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by.

Boyle on Colours.

19. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow.

Tatler.

And, for the time shall oot seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this self place.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There must be no alters with hedges at the higher end for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green; nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

Bacon, Ess.

Walk off, sirrah,
And stir my horse for catching cold.

Brown, and Fl. Luc's Pilgrimage.

Dryden.

22. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line is impossible.

Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star.

Cowley.

23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.

Dryden.

24. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please.

Roscommon.

Those who sleep without dreaming can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it.

Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly to the hands of the chief citizens.

Addison, Rem. on Italy.

Success, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing:
Succumb conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whate'er thy cost.

Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day.

Garth, Ovid.

25. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there was any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.

Tillotson.

26. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for ought is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.

Boyle.

27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.

Say, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Shakespeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke.

Dryd.

28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers
Have look'd their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engros'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their souls with arts and martial exercises.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The kingdom of God was first sent by its counsel; upon which counsel there are yet, for our instruction, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he should abate.

Cowley.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise.
Nor to be call'd a wit, o'er to wear bays.

Denham.

There shall come a night worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of it, I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you.

Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.

Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name!
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and condemn'd him first for you.

Dryden, Virg.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But wish'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden, Aurungzeb.

Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their words like mine, for noble ends.

Dryden, Aurungzeb.

But with the upside down, to show its inclination for below.

Swift.

30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

To suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hooker, Pref.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus, but he fear'd his wife.

Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal, for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Bp. Swinburn.

Aristotle is for poetical justice;
They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Fulton.

31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spin that I bear so well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else so fit for me.

Donne.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatic and Mediterranean.

Addison on Italy.

Peria is conspicuously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbuthnot on China.

Scholars are truly of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Fulton.

32. With intention of.

And by that justice hath remov'd the cause
Of those our accomplices, who, for rapine sent
Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Walter.

Here huntmen with delight may read
How to chase dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
God hath made some things for as long a duration
as they are capable of. Tillotson, Sermon.

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are coursers driv'n, who shed their master's blood.
Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for? Locke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Aga-memnon, by means of Hector. Boissac.

33. Becoming; belonging to.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manifold, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakspeare, Othello.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his sleep, than to spend so many good men in the winning
of it by force. Knutley.
Joys for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.
It is for you to ravage reas and land,
Unauthor'd by my supreme command! Dryden, Rn.

His sire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the duties. Dryden, Rn.
It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do,
and perish with them. Tillotson.

34. Notwithstanding.
This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philocheus expresseth. Hooker.
God's desertion shall, for ought he knows,
next minute supersede. Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.
South.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.
South.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson.

40. In regard of; in preservation of, I cannot for my life, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the usual knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my tears. Shakspeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison, Spect.

41. For all. Notwithstanding.
Neither doubts you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanly; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more fully than to prove myself a man in this enterprise. Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knutley, Hist.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did show his footing found all the flood. Davies.

They resolve, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperors of China or Japan, we are well enough contented for all that, to let them govern at home. Shifting fleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.

The night has passed over such businesses;
but my rubble is not to be mumbled up in silence,
for all her pertness. Sidney.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

42. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you; in the same sense with the French pour.
Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, in now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to break my wrong? Shakspeare, F. 4.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just and certain fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

For a conj. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.
Heav'n deth with us as we with torches dead,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakspeare, For Meas.

Old imbandmen I at Solisium know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But he'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is it?
For the first matter here is vanity less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

I would go forward in this course of seeking hard places and piracies in authors, but for that I have now other business that more concerns me. Milnes, Span. Gramma. (1599), p. 82.

Jalous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakspeare, Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scold;
For she is with me. Shakspeare, Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Faifair.

Many excrecences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.

For as much as In publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful in respect of God;
but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into tradition concerning his travels. Relaph, Hist. of the World.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any further propagation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their law; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon, War with Spain.

For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God of his goodness in give you safe deliverance, and hath preserved you in the great danger of childbirth, you shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God. Common Pr. Chaucing of Women.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spa water.
Arbutnot on Diet.

4. For why. Because; for this reason that. In its oldest acceptance, where-
for. [Sax. pop-phi.]

For what things that ye han said in darkness, shulen be said in light. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xii. 3.

Solyman had three hundred batteries; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the enormous into battle, had brought no pieces of artillery with him. Knutley.

For.* In composition for is sometimes privative, as, forbear, and forbid, in its fourth meaning; sometimes merely intensive, as forbath; and sometimes only communicative of an ill sense, as forwear.

To FORAGE.† v. n. [from foris, abroad,
Latin. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this word, except that, under the substantive, he adduces the Germ.
fouage, and Fr. fouage; to which may be added the low Lat. foragium. Serenus derives forage from the Icel. fodr, as Du Cange derives fouage from the low Latin forum, fodder; Sax. forpe; whence foderac, forrar, and thus perhaps forage. See also FORAGER.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.

Benson, and Fl. The Pilgrim.

TO FORCLOSE. * See TO FORECLOSE.

FORD. * n. s. [from for, Saxon, from foran, to pass; for, Welsh, a passage, a way.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Jacob passed over the ford Jabbok. Gen. xxxii. 22.

They took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and suffered not a man to pass over. Judg. iii. 28.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;

They pass'd the stream, when she had found the ford. Faust.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards The ford, and of itself the water flies

All taste of living wight. Milton, P. L.

Permit thy ghost to pass the Stygian ford;

But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perished lord. Dryden.

TO FORD. * v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathoms, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh, Hist.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low.

FORDEABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitis upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh, Hist.

A countryman sounded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Etranger.

TO FORDO. * v. a. [Sax. forþan, to waste, to destroy.] Dr. Johnson has given this ancient word as forodo, with a pretended derivation from for and do; but the Saxon forþan is the true word. It is one of our oldest verbs, part. forþan. Yet Mr. Horne Tooke, as Dr. Jamieson also notices, has strangely interpreted Chaucer's usage of it by "forth-done, i. e. done to go forth, or caused to go forth, i. e. out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors!" Divers of Purley, i. 495. This he gives as an illustration of the adverb forþan. Johnson might have laughed at this, as much as Mr. Tooke has thought proper to laugh at some of Johnson's wanderings. It is clearly ruined, undone.]

1. To ruin; to destroy: opposed to making happy. A word obsolete.

I see no more but that I am fordo! Min heritage mote I needs sell, And ben a beggar; here I will not dwell. Chaucer, French. Tail.

Beseeking him with prayer, and with praise, If either salves, or oils, or herbs, or charms, A fordone wight from dore of death mote raise, He would at her request prolong her husband's daies. This doth betoken, Spenser, F. Q. l. v. 41.

The come they follow did, with desperate hand, Fordo its own life. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

This is the night, That either makes me, or fordoes me quite. Shakespeare, Othello.

He hath commission from thy wife and me To hang Cordelia in the prison, and To lay the blame upon her own despair, That she fordoth herself. Shakespeare, Lear.

2. To weary; to overcome.

The heavy ploughman sowers, All with weary task fordoes. Shakespeare, Midw. N. Dream.

FORE. adj. [from for, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression. Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Chryse.

FORE. * adv. [formerly forne, Sax. forne.]

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four salets, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh, Em.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, or situation; of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

3. Fore and aft. The whole length of a ship.

TO FOREADMO. * v. a. [from fore and admo.] To nish. Obsolete.

With these foreboding words restrains their hate.
Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be present; to feel a secret sense of something future.
Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain importune;
My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more.

My soul foreboded I should find the lowest
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous power.
Pope.

FOREBODER. n. s. [from forebode.] 1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your rain has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder.
L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBODEMENT.* n. s. [from forebode.] Used by Dr. Johnson in defining presagement. See PRESAGEMENT.

FOREBODING.* n. s. [from forebode.] Presage; perception beforehand.
The subjects can over-whelmly extinguish those horrible forebodings of conscience.
Bentley, Serm. 1.

The melancholy forebodings of incomprehensible misery and ruin.
A. Smith, Theor. of Mor. Sent. ii. 2.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.
Not far away he hence doth won
Fervently a fountain, where I late him left.
Spenser, F. Q.

To FORECAST. v. a. [fore and cast.] 1. To scheme; to plan before execution.

He shall forecast his devices against the strong holds.
Dan. xi.

2. To adjust; to contrive antecedently.
The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,
That just when the desert and fruits were plac'd,
The friend's alarm began.
Dryden, Theod. and Honor.

3. To foresee; to provide against.
It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences.
L'Estrange.

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.
And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained late, how can frail flesh weigh Forecast, but it must needs to issue come?
Spenser, F. Q.

When broad awake, she finds in troubled fit,
Forecasting how his face he might annoy,
Spenser, F. Q.

FO'RCAST. n. s. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the single tier,
The king was silly finger'd from the deck!
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods.
Adisson on Metals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Merry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age.
Pope.

FORECASTER. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RCASTLE.† n. s. [fore and castle.] The name perhaps, as a learned friend thinks, originates from the circumstance of ships of war having formerly parapets, and battlements, like land-fortifications, with small castles built fore and aft. In a ship, is that part where the forecast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the pro.
Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castle, contrary to that which had been anciently used.
Rodrig. Ex.

FORECHOSEN. part. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

Groves is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forecited passage is continued.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

To FORECLOSE.† v. a. [not from fore and close, as Dr. Johnson asserts; but from the old Fr. forclois, which is the participle of the word forclorre, to exclude. See Kelham and Laconbe. It is probably the Latin, foras cludere, to shut the doors. Our word is, in old writings, forclorse.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.
They are foreclosed from the mission.
Mortin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. C. i. B.
But greenish waves, and heavie lowering skies,
All comfort else foreclosed our esid'd eyes.
Mir. for Mag. p. 415.

The embargo with Spain foreclosed this trade.
Forster.

2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.
The mortgagee may call upon the mortgagor to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof to be for ever foreclosed from redeeming the same.
Blackstone.

FORCLOSEURE.* n. s. [from forclose.] A deprivation of the power of redeeming a mortgage. A law term.

FORCING.* v. n. To preconceive.
Expecting or forcing, that Nemesis and retribution will take hold of the authors of our hurt.
Bacon.

FORCED.* part. [fore and date.] Dated before the true time.

An abortive and foreclosed discovery.
Milton, Reas. of Ch. Geo. B. 2.

FO'REDECK. n. s. [fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.
To the foredeck went and thence did look For rocky Scylla, Chapman, Odyssey.

To FOREDESIGN. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and fore-designed by the wise Author of nature.
Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

To FOREDETERRINE.* v. a. [fore and determine.] To decree beforehand.

When we ascribe power unto God, "Thine is the power," we attribute unto him a power that is infinite, a power which can effect whatsoever his will hath fore-determined.
Ep. Hieron. Epist. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 176.

To FOREDOOM.† v. a. [fore and doom.] Sax. forþedoman. To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the real freedom† by Jove.
Dryden, Æn.

The willing merit will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art freedom† to view the Stygian state.
Fate freedom†, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end.
Dryden.

Here Britain's statement oft the fall freedom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home.
Pope.

FOREDOOM.* n. s. [Sax. forþedoman, to judge.] Judgement.

And Jove unfinish'd sentence and freedom
On Priam king, and on his town so best,
I could not lin but I must there lament.
Socrate, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FOREDOOR.* n. s. [Sax. forþe-burc.] A door in the front of a house.

FOREELDER.* n. s. [fore and elder. Sax. forþealder, to grow old.] An ancestor; A common word in the north of England.

FOREEND. n. s. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debt to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time.
Shakespeare, Cymb.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him,
grew a small green branch of palm.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

FOREFATHER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.
The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.
Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor.
Rothg. Hist.

Concels is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefather's joints?
Shakespeare.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country.
Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way.
Addison, an Italy.

Blest poor! his great forefathers cry
Reflecting, and reflect in his race.
Pope.

To FOREEND. v. a. It is doubtful whether from fore or for and end. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forwarn: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following ex-

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our nature,
That we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of friction.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so grieved him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are, who, fabled studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce.

- FO'REIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native, a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not law to entertain him. Dryden, Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch, but the lemon, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects.

- FO'REIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

- TO FOREMAGINE. v. a. [from fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that bubble.

- TO FOREJUDGE. † v. a. [from fore and judge; old Fr. forjurer.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to prejudge.

- FOREJUDGMENT. \ n. s.* [from fore and judgement.] Judgement formed beforehand.

But seldom seen, forejudgement proves right.
Spearer, Maispouton, p. 320.

- TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [from fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those things.
He foreknows John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace.

Calthas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foretold.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe.

- FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen. It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.

More, Divine Dialogues.
FOREKNOW'ER. \ n. s.* [from foreknow.] He who knows what is to happen.

He will make God the foreknow'— of evil.
Shakespeare, Four. of the Faith, (1565), fol. 41. b.

- FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. s. [from fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saves us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world.

I told him you was asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chooses to speak with you.

If I foreknow,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforfeited.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters.

FO'REL. \ n. s.* [from forellus, forulus, Latin, fourreau, Fr. 'id quo aliquid tegitur et obvolvitur. &c.' Carpent. Suppl. Du Cange. 'Vagina: parmi les anciens auteurs signifie l'armoire à livres.' Menage in V. FOURREAU.] A kind of parchment; sheepskin dressed on one side only, commonly used for covers of account-books. The word is still familiar among stationers.

No manner of persons will sell this present book, unbound, above the price of two shillings and two-pence; and bound in forel for its ad. and not above.

The Booke of the Common Prayer, fol. 1549, last leaf.

- FO'RELAND. n. s. [from fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skillful seer-men wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or fordland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails.

TO FORELAY. † v. a. [from fore and lay. Dr. Johnson says. It is in the first meaning the Teut. verlaegen; and our own word was formerly, and should be always, in the sense of laying wait for, written forlay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush.

Some secret detractor hath forlaid thee by a whispering misintention.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forlaid a traveller;

The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thicket, and one thrives the brake.

2. To contrive antecedently to prevent. [from fore and lay.]

That our serious humiliations may forlay his too well deserved judgements. Rp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

3. To lay down before-hand.

These grounds being forlaid and understood, I affirm, first, that presbyters, &c.

Mele, Disc. 1649, p. 110.

- FOREL'ADER. \ n. s.* [from fore and leader.] One who leads others by his example.

Would God that we learned not, by the fore-leaders before named, to charge and conjure each other into the pledge!

Gaueage, Diet for Drunkards, 1576.

- TO FO'RELEND. \ v. a.* [from fore and lend.] To give beforehand. Not in use.

As if that life to loss they had forelent.
Spearer, F. Q. iv. li. 6.

- TO FO'RELIFT. v. a. [from fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he inward him did pass,
Forlifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the livid ground.

- As for great joy of new comen guests. Spearer, F. Q.
FO'RELOCK. n. s. [from fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forehead of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do by him the forelock take.

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring; but not beneath his shoulders broad.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait.

Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it.

- TO FORELOO. \ v. n.* [from fore and look.] To see beforehand.

Then did I foreloot,
And saw this day mark'd white in Clotho's book.
H. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

- FO'REMAN. n. s. [from fore and man.] The first or chief person.

He is a very sensible man, shoots furies, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury.

- FO'REMAST. \ n. s.* [from fore and mast.] The first mast of a ship towards the head.

- FO'REMAST Man. \ n. s.* One that furls the sails, and takes his course at the helm.

- FOREMEANT. \ part.* [from fore and mean.] Intended beforehand.

As being the place by destiny foremean'd.
H. Jonson, Masques.

- FOREMENTIONED. adj. [from fore and mention.] Mentioned or recited before. It is observable that many participles are compounded with fore, whose verbs have no such composition.

Dacier, in the life of Aurelius, has not taken notice of the forementioned figure on the pillar.

- FOREMOST. † adj. [from fore, Sax. forpmerc.]

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistresses there.

That bold Semproulus,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous error to madness.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost part of honour held.

- FO'REMOSTLY. \ adv.* [from foremost.] Among the foremost.

But when he saw his daughter dear
Coming on most foremostly,
He wrang his hands, and tore his hair,
And cried out most piteously.

(Old Ballad of Jephthah, Percy's Rel. i. li. 3.)

The first of them could things to come foresee /
The next, could of things present best advise ;
If third, things past could keep in memory.

There be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes.

At his foresaw approach, already quake
The Caspian kingdoms and Mesopotam lake ;
Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
And threaten'g oracles denounce the war.

2. To provide for : with to. Out of use.
A king against a storm must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure.

FORESEE'ER. * n. s. [from foresee.] One who foresees things.

There are some such very great forecasters, that they grow into the vanity of pretending to see, where nothing is to be seen.

To FORESEE'ER. * v. a. [fore and seize.] To grasp beforehand.

Proceed, illustrious, happy chief, proceed,
Forecast the garlands for thy brow decreed.

To FORESHAW'. * v. a. [fore and shadow.] To foresight; to typify.

That the great efficacy and efficacy of our Saviour's death and passion might appear, it was by manifold types foreshadowed and in divers prophecies foretold.

To FORESHAW'. * v. a. [fore and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Dr. Johnson brings an example from Shakespeare's Cymbeline, where the word is not foreshaming but sore-shaming.

To FORESHAW'. * v. a. [Sax. foresceapian.] Yet our word, in modern times, is written foreshaw. To predict; to represent before it comes. See To FORESHAW.

The dreams that troubled them did foreshaw this.
Oh, that same drawing in your necker lip there,
Forecast no goodness, lady.

FORESHAW'. * n. s. [from the verb.] A sign; that by which any thing is foreshown.

With vermilion drops at ev'n his tresses bleed,
Forecast of future heat. Fairfax, Trist. xiii. 54.

FORESHAW'. * n. s. [from foreshaw.] One who predicts a thing.

That they might be thought the effectors of what they were the forecasters.

FORESHIP. * n. s. [fore and ship. Sax. for-scep.] The anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the foreship.

To FORESHORTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

FORESHORTENING. * n. s. [from foreshorten.] The act of shortening figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foremost; and be forbids the foreshortening, because they make the parts appear little.

To FORESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.] 1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate.

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had fore-shown.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,
Whose purple blush the day foreshows.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshadowed a storm.

2. To represent before it comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshown? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled?

FO'RESIDE. * n. s. [fore and side.] Superficial appearance; outside.

Now when these counterfeiters were thus un-cased
Out of the foreside of their forgerie,—
All gun to jest and gibe full merited.

To FO'RESIGHT. * n. s. [fore and sight.] 1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below: while thou to foresight wast;
As once thou slept'st, while she to life was form'd.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, no once could rest a whit.

In matters of arms he was both skillful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be borne or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them.

FO'RESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.] Prescient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his silly successor.

To FO'RESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Paulins did but foresignify.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light
On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,
They oft foresignify, and threaten ill.

To FO'RESKIN. * n. s. [fore and skin.] The prepiece.

Their own hand
An hundred of the faithless foe shall stay,
And for a dower their hundred foreskins pay,

To FO'RESKIRT. * n. s. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt.

To FO'RESLACK. * v. a. [fore and slack.] Spenser writes it foreslack in the Fairy Queen: To neglect by idleness.

It was a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land.

To FO'RESLOW. * v. a. [fore and slow.] 1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could fore-slow

Their lusty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:

The wand'ring Nereids, though they rain'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form.

If they be any time foreslowed and trashed by either outward or inward restrain.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assault them.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed.

Chronos, how many fishes do you know
That rule their boats, and use their nets aright?

That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan,
That few were such; and now some few are none.

To FO'RESLOW. * v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory:

Foreslow no longer, make we hence amends.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

To FO'RESPEAK. * v. n. [fore and speak. Sax. fope-specan.] 1. To predict; to foreshow; to foreshow; to foretell.

My mother was half a witch; never any thing that she forespoke, but came to pass.

2. To forbid. [From for and speak.] Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars, And say't it is not fit.

3. To bewitch. This is a very ancient sense of the word, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. "For-spoken or charmen." Ort, Vocab. "To foreshow, to bewitch." Barret's Alv.

That my bad tongue should be bad usage made so,
Forespoke their castle, doth bewitch their corn.

To forespeak whole flocks as they did feed.
Dray, Epp from El. Cobb, to Duke Humph.

FO'RESPEAKING. * n. s. [from forespeak.] 1. A prediction.

Old Godfrey of Winchester thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names.

2. A preface; a forespeech. Hulot, *FO'RESPEECH. * n. s. [Sax. fope-sparc.] A preface; something spoken introductory to the main design.*

FO'RESPENT. * adj. 1. Forepassed; past. [fore and spend.] Is not enough thy evil life forespent?

You shall find his vanities forespent,
Where but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly.

2. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice.

3. Wasted; tired; spent. [for and spend.]

After him came spurring hand
A gentleman, almost forewent with speed.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FORESPUR'ER. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this *fore-spur*er comes before his lord. Shaks.

FOREST.† n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian. So far Dr. Johnson. He might have added the Welsh forest. The many derivations of this word are also too curious to be overpassed. Menage derives it from the Low Latin foresta; a word, which first occurs in the capitulars of Charlemagne; and Vossius deduces that from the German forst, i. e. de foris, meaning that forests are out of or beyond towns: Spelman from foris and restare, with the same inference: Others from foris and stare, meaning a place, says Cotgrave, "whereto the access or entry is forbidden to others;" Others from feris, i. e. ferarum statio, a station for wild beasts. See Du Cange in V. FORESTA. The last seems the most probable etymology. In the Black Book of the Exchequer, foresta is feresta, with a view, as it has been supposed, to this derivation.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot choose but feed in continual danger of life.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's hill Shall come against him.

Who can improve the forest, bid the tree Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

There be also which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grassy, and not overgrown with beasts; or else timber-lands, as in forests.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
How the first forest riv'd its shady bread.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts: the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agisters, regarders, bailiffs, and beaules. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pycpolders to a fair.

FOREST.† adj. [Ital. foresta, agrestis.] Sylvan; rustic.

In a lodge, or forest house.
Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 118.

FORESTAFF.† n. s. [fore and staff.] An instrument used at sea for taking the altitudes of heavenly bodies. See CROSS-STAFF.

FORESTAGE.† n. s. [Fr. forestage; low Latin, forestagium.] An ancient service paid by foresters to the king; also, the right of foresters.

TO FORESTALL.† v. a. [*super*callan, Saxon, i. e. pope, before, and stal, station. In Domesday Book forestal is an obstructing a person in the highway, an intercepting or stopping in the road. A foreteller, stopping the articles coming to market, hence took his disreputable name.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishment thine own and others will.

As if thou mad'st it thy will. Herbert.
What need a man forestall his debt of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged bathy thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or passion'd 'd being down. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaks. Hen. IV.

If thou covest death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton, P. L.
I will not forestall your judgement of the rest.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He hold spoke, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestall'd place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

4. To deprive by something prior; with off.
Not now in use.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day.

Perhaps forestalling might prevent'd them.
Milton, Comus.

FORESTALLER. n. s. [from fore stall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of engrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder.

FORESTOR.† n. s. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shakespeare, As you like it.
FORESTER.† adj. [from forest.] Supplied with trees.

Whereby she [Newforest] became first forested.
Dryden, Polyd. S. 1.

FORESTER.† n. s. [forestier, French; foresterius, low Latin.]

1. An officer of the forest.
Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we may stand and play the nurseries in?
— Here by, upon the edge of yonder copse.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.
Foresters and borderers are not generally so civil and reasonable, as might be wished.

3. One who understands the nature and the laws of forests.

You are cried up, my lord, to be an excellent horseman, huntsman, forester.

Howell, Letter to Lord Lindsey, iv. 16.
The greatest forester, they say, that ever was in England, was king Canutus the Dane; and after him, St. Edward; at which time Iberius Rufus, the Red-Book for Forest-Laws was made. Ibid.

4. A forest-tree.

This niceness is more conspicuous in flowers, and the herbaceous offspring, than in foresters.

FORESWAT. } adj. [of for and swat, from FORESWART. } adj. [from for and swart.] Spent with heat.

Miso. Shaks. like a couple of forested melters, were getting the pulse-vein of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.

TO FORETEASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.] 1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, forestaled fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first
Made common, and unhalow'd, ore our taste.

Milton, P. L.

FORETEASTE. n. s. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury; it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity.

FORETEASTE.† n. s. [from fore and taste.] One that tastes before another. Sherwood.

TO FORETEACH.† v. a. [fore and teach.] To teach before; to inculcate beforehand. Mr. Upton reads, in the following passage, fortaught, making it a verb, with the meaning of misinterpreted, or wrongly and wicked taught; but it is a participle agreeing with hesta or commandments. Spenser himself reads foretaught.

And underneath his filthy feet did tread
The sacred things, and holy beastes foretaught.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 18.

TO FORETELL.† v. a. preter, and past. pass. foretold [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.
What art thou, whom heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
I found
The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold.

Milton, P. L.
Ward'n in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone his faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven would it my word and your deeds behold. Pope.

2. To foretold; to forewarn.

These ill prophetic signs have oft foretold.
Dr. Hutton, Virgil.

To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.
All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold these days.
Acts, iii. 24.

FORETELLER. n. s. [from foretell.] Predictor; forewarner.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee them. Hagley on Colours.

FORETELLING. n. s. [from foretell.] A declaration of something future.

These predictions are very rare foretellings, wont to be lapped in obscure folds.

To FORETHINK. v. a. [fore and think.
Sax. fope-thincan.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have pre-science of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heav'n. Shakespeare, R. Hen.
Adam could not be ignorant of the punishment due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would charge his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bp. Hall.

To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime;
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wiser, forethinking, weighing politician!
South.

FORETHOUGHT. n. s. [from forethink.
Sax. fope-thonc.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.
He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by epistemonical forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Esrange.

2. Provident care.

Devises by law and testament are always more favoured in construction, than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution,
forethought, and advice. Blackstone.

FORETOOTH. n. s. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth;
the incisor.

The foretooth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chisels. Ray on the Creation.

FORETOP. n. s. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a perwig. So far Dr. Johnson, who cites Dryden in proof of this definition. It equally meant, within remembrance, the top of meu's hair fantastically frizzled or shaped; and was in former days also a male ornament, according to Ben Jonson.

Each after other came in stately dance,

To FOREWISH. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them
lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished
might in time come to effect.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them
lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished
might in time come to effect.

Straight all his hopes extal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfd a look.

Dryden, Virg.
Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour to betray the town.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.
How the mud'red paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the flames. Pope, Odys.

FORFEITABLE † adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

To the trackless deep they trust
Their forfeitable cargo. Crowe's Lewiston Hill.

FORFEITER † n. s. [from forfeit.] One who incurs punishment, by forfeiting his bond. Formerly printed, in the following passage, incorrectly, forfeiture.

Lovers.
And then in dangerous bonds, yet not alike;
Though forfeiter you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FORFEITURE † n. s. [from forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

His father's care,
That for the want of issue, took him home, (Though with the forfeiture of his own fame,
Will look unto his safety.

Beaumont and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debat forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Beaumont, War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; not forfeitures be enacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously.

By. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORFEX † n. s. [Latin.] A pair of scissars.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,
To enclose the lock; now joins it, to divide.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

FORGE † v. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE † n. s. [from forge, French; probably corrupted from the Latin, fabrica, a shop or workhouse. The Ital. fergia, however, is to compact or put together,
and to press; and accordingly, Mr.
Callander thinks that the name of a smith's forge may be thence derived.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

In other part stood one who at the forge
Labouring, two many clods of iron and brass
Had melted.

The w'er-labour'd Cyclop from his task retir'd,
The Æolian forge exhausted of its fires.

Pope, Statius.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy,
the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

TO FORGE † v. a. [from forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martial.

And Mars himself conducted them; both which being for'd of gold,

Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman, Iliad.
These are still but sparks of odium and scorn,
which fly from the vulgar anvils and hammers;
which commonly both overheat, and overlabour,
what they undertake to forge or reform.

By. Taylor, Artif. Hands, n. 163.

If the substantial subject be well forged out,
we need not examine the sparks which irregularly fly from it. Brown, Chr. Mar. ii. 2.

Tiger with tiger, best with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
Which earth at first for ploughshares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.

Titus, Jun.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had for'd himself a name i'th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare, Coriol.

His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forger, that his tongue must vent.

Shakespeare.

Those names that the schools forger, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or within the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king.

I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FORGER † n. s. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

Tough holly and smooth birch must altogether
burn;

What should the builder serve, supplies the forger's turn. Dryden, Polyb. S. 17.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Gen. of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly betrays out the means of his own detection.

West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY † n. s. [from forge.]

1. The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to soothe your forger and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens, Sermon.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

[He] ran on embattled armies clad in iron;

Made arms ridiculous, useless the forger
Of brass shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail Adamantian strength. Milton, S. A.

TO FORGE † v. a. preter. forger; part.
forgeren, or forger. [forgeren, Saxon;
vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember; to your knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakspeare, Rich. II.
When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Forgot not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclesi. xxviii. 6.
No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget: yet will I not forget thee.

Isaiah, xlii. 5.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of men forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL † adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

But didst thou tell me so?

I am forgetful. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

If the deep's trench

Of that forgetful lake bottom not still. Mil. P. L.
But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cures
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.

Dryden, Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful;
careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.

Heb. xiii. 2.

The queen is comfortable, and we forgetful

In our long absence. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Have you out love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

I, in fact, a real interested have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And with the usual forgetful's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS † n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou on more will weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness!

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep it is away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope, Stat.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETTIVE † adj. [from forge.] That may forget or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakespeare.

FORGETTER.† n. s. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

I think here
A strange forgetter of herself.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Captain.

2. A careless person.

FORGETTING.† n. s. [from forget.] Inattention; forgetfulness.

I am not willing to discover the forgettings of reverend men. Milton, Dict. and Disc. of Divor.

FORGETTINGLY.† adv. [from forgetting.]
Without attention; forgetfully.

I fear I have forgettingly transgress'd against the dignity of the court. B. Jonson, For.

FORGETTABLE.† adj. [from forget.] That may be pardoned. Sherwood.

To FORGIVE.† v. a. [from gifan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.
Then heaven forgive him too! Shakspeare. Macbeth.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever my malice in your heart.

Were bid against me, now forgive me frankly.
— Sir Thomas Lovell, I am free forgive you,
As I should have forgiven: I forgive all.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. To pardon a crime.
The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah, xxxiii. 24.

If prayers
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and I be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and Infernal sin forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milt. P. L.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.
The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

S. Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS.† n. s. [from gifenne, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.
To the Lord our God belong mercies and for- giveness. Dan. ii. 9.

2. Pardon of an offender.
Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manas.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee;
Nor blot me on the slab. Shakspeare.

Forgiveness to the Injur'd do belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.
God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. Bosch.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.
Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Spent.
Mercy above did hourly plead
For her remembrance here below;
And mild forgiveness interceded
To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER.† n. s. [from forgive.] One who pardoneth.

To FORGO.† See To FORZEC.

FORGOTT.† part. pass. of forget. Not FORGOTTEN.† remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Dan. xxi. 21.

Great Straddford! worthy of that name, though all
Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Dennham.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To FORHEAL.† [perhaps from the Saxon, for-healban, to detain.] To draw, or distress; as the contemporary commentator on Spenser defines it. Not now in use.

All this long tale
Nought easeth the care that me doth forheale.

Spenser, Shep. Col. Sept. v. 245.

To FORHEND.† See To FOREHEND.

FORINSECAL.† adj. [Lat. forinsecus, from without.] Foreign; alien.

Submitting ourselves principally to forinsecal potentates and powers. Surrender of the Monks of Beildenden, 50 Hen. 8. Burnet.

To FORISFAMILIATE.† v. a. [Lat. foris and familia.] To put a son in possession of land in the life-time of a father. A term of the civil law.

Provided the eldest son had not received a provision in lands from his father, or, as the civil law would call it, had not been forisfamiliatus, in his life-time. Blackstone.

FORK.† n. s. [Sax. Saxon; furca, Latin;
forch, Welsh; fource, French. Our eating-forks were introduced late in the sixteenth or early in the seventeenth century. Beaumont and Fletcher ridicule a traveller by the title of fork- carving.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

They had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks. 1 Sam. xiii. 21.

At Midsummer down with the brawles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tasso.
The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the feld to pursue.

Ran Call our dog. Dryden, Man's Priest.

The laudable use of forks,
Brought into custom here as they are in Italy.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.
I dine with forks that have but two prongs.

Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

— Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. A point.
Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting.

Adrian on Medals.

4. A gibbet. [old Fr. furc; Lat. furca.]
They had run through all punishments, and just 'scaped the fork. Butler, Rem. ii. 195.

To FORK.† v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer, Husb.

FORKED.† adj. [from fork.]

1. Opening into two or more parts.
Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked
rod, with a head fantastically curv'd upon it with a knife. Shakspeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shaks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools

Should in their confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gored.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

He would have spoke;
But his for his return'd with forked tongue

To forked tongue. Milton, Par. Lost.

'Tis dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retirement of death.

Change my fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.

Raccolmen.

2. Having two or more meanings.

I oft have heard him say, how he admir'd
Men of your large profusion, that could speak
To every cause, and things were contentious,
Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law;

That with most quick agility, could turn;
And re-turn: make knots and undo them;
Give forth counsel. B. Jonson, For.

FORKEDLY.† adv. [from forked.] In a forked form. Sherwood.

FORKEDNESS.† n. s. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

FORKHEAD.† n. s. [from fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It scolding, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forked keen,
Eftsoons it fled away, and might no where be seen.

Spenser, F. Q.

FORKINESS.† n. s. [from forky.] A fork-like division. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

FORKTAIL.† n. s. A name given by English fishermen to a young salmon, in his fourth year's growth.

FORKY.† adj. [from fork.] Forked; fur-cated; opening into two parts.

A forky staff we don't usually apply.

Addison, Fables of the third Æneid.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd at the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their fork's tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope, Messiah.

To FORLAY.† See To FORLEAY.

To FORLEND.† See To FORELEND.

FORLORE.† [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleornan, in Dutch verloren.]
Deserted; forsook; forsaken.

Obsolète.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore.

Spenser, F. Q.

That wretched world be 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loth, as thing forlore.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thus fell the tree, with noise the demurs roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore.

Spenser, F. Q.

FORLOREN.† adj. [from forleornan, from forleornan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forloren.

Spenser, Hob. Tale.

Tell me, good Holinot, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wof thy tender lambs y-greet?
Or is thy lappie broke that sounds we sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lads forloren?

Spenser, Shep. Col.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren.

How can I live without thee? how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forloren!

Milton, Par. Lost.

Lies through the perplex'd ways of this drear wood;
The nodding horror of whose shady bowers,
Throats the forlorn and wandering passenger.

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subside!
Milton, P. L.

Like a declining statesman, left forlorn.
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Dehaen.
The good old usen forlorn of human aid,
For reformed to his heart's pity patron pray.

Phalot's lament forlorn. Fenton.
As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus far from Delia to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpy'd, and forlorn. Pope, Aut.

2. Taken away. This sense shows that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost, Dr. Johnson says, citing the authority of Speuser. The older authority of Chaucer presents the verb in the sense of to lose.

Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorn,
Curs'd the time that ever he was borne.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reason. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son?
Or where hath he hung up his sword on blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?

3. Small; despicable; in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FORLORN, † n. s. [from for and lorn.]

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken person.

Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn.

Advise, whether I shall, or ought to be,
vailed upon by the impertinencies of my own sex, to give to the importunities of your sex. I assure you I am surrounded with both, though at present a forlorn. Talbot, M. 210.

2. FORLORN. Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed or expected to perish.

Criticks in play,
Who tolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.

If death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve or forlorn hussar, for the cannon's mouth. Honon, Works, li. 528.

FORLORNNESS, † n. s. [Sax. forlopenere.]
Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men despised God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

Our natives without a foreign degeneracy, without an importation, of sin could never have been guilty to such a forlornness, could never have designed such contrivances to religion and nature. Menningham, Disc. p. 154.

To FORLORN, v. n. [from for and lorn.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldrick, which forlorn
Aurath her snowy breast, and did divide
Her daily pains, which like young fruit in May,
Now little gain to swell; and being by'd,
Through her thin weed their places only signify'd.

FORM, † n. s. [from for, Latin; forma,
French; by metathesis, from the Dorick

passa, as some contend; and the past part.
of the Sax. formman, to make, according to Mr. H. Tooke. The sound of our word is in most cases with the o short; but in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh centuries, it is with o long, as if it were foarm.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
— Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Shakespeare, Job, li. 16.

Gold will endure a retemper fire without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.

Matter, as wise logicians say;
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefactors shall prove
Not well disposed, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly,
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Here tolls and death, and death's half-freedom,
sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syl-logism, can not reduce any one argument to those forms.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions on the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah, lii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd a form a little,
Was not like mine. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rights.

Though well we may not pose upon his life,
Without the form of justice, yet our pow'r
Shall do a court's or to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, away all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions that sit lower. Bacon, Ess.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no count or honourable form used in England, he devised a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes.

They general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of love, or love?

8. Stated method; established practice;
ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout all the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of policy and regimen in all churches may be laid, without holding any one certain form to be necessary to them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unmediated and confused service, which distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below.

9. A long seal.

If a clark be defined a seal for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seal for a single person without a back; and a form is a seal for several persons, without a back.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taking following her into the park. Shakespeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden, Duffness.

11. The seat or bed of a harc.

Now far a clark like hare in form by peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
The ambitious lark, with mirrorous clark,
They catch, while he, a fool! to himself makes love.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
Lining and fearful of the storm
Of horns and blows, clark back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not justly infer, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To FORM, † v. a. [from for, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought.

Fossil, or gray in metal. Milton, P. L.

Determin'd to advance into our rooms
A creature form'd of earth. Alfiston, P. L.

She form'd it the phantom of well-bodied air.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to farthest wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life as form'd.

Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to farthest wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life as form'd.

Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to farthest wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life as form'd.

Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to farthest wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life as form'd.

Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to farthest wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life as form'd.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his hero, to give him piety or valour for his manners.

Dryden, Ros. Dedicat.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner; as, he formed his troops.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design of single persons, but of corporations and successions.

Deacy of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it.

Deacy of Piety.

He dies too soon;

And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:

The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time.

Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not;
Thus form'd for speed he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden, Virg.

8. To seat. See the eleventh definition of the substantive.

Where the hearth was warm'd with winter's feasting fires,

The melancholy here is form'd in brakes and bricks.

Dryden, Polyd. 8. 2.

To FORM,* v. n. To take any particular form. Chiefly, perhaps, a military expression.

FORMAL, adj. [formel, French; forma- lis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affection.

The justices,

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Shakspeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tofious, but doth diminish
the credit of him that speaks.

Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve.

Hobbes.

There are formal and verbal languages, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war;
but all these formalities the law of nature supplies,
as in the case of pirates.

Bacon, Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And be that on their changes looke,
Would think them govern'd by our books.

Walker.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey 'st where it concerns us most.

Dryden, Aureng.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains.

Page.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice;
the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is determined.

Haller, Elem. of Speech.

It is Harmine agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subject to a superior; but without it makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it; whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation.

Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God.

Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristically; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes,

Not like a formal man.

Shakspeare, Ant. & Cleop.

I will not let him stir,
Till I have wash'd his approval tears; I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

FORMALIST,* n. s. [formaliste, French; from form.]

1. One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and it fits a satire to persons of judgement, to see what shifts they use here, and what perspectives to make spectatles to seem a body that hath depth and bulk.

Bacon.

A grave, stanch, skillfully managed force, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got mana slight formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety.

Smith.

2. An advocate for form in disputations.

It may be objected by certain formalists, that we can prove nothing duly without proving it to form.

Ld. Sturgesheury.

FORMALITY,* n. s. [formaliti, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for convenience sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary.

Hobbes.

Formalities of extraordinary and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs.

Kia Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners.

L'Etrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine office master of formality and custom, but of convenience.

Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forewent the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefild perjury, and fix the shame.

Dryden, Jur.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all set down in their formalities, so the Gauls did the Roman sectors.

Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity.

Glennville, Stregis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God.

Stillingfleet.

To FORMALIZE,* v. a. [formelizer, French; from formal.] To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actually his whole race, as if both he and we were many limbs compacted into one body.

Hosker.

To FORMALIZE,* v. n. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

Our gallants can formalize in other words.

Hales, Rem. p. 84.

They turned their poor cottages into stately palaces, their true fasting into formalizing and partial abstinence.

Hales, Rem. p. 111.

He formalized so long upon this, that Ireland remained still unsupplied.

Clarendon, Hist. Rebell. b. 21.

There were many particulars to it which the officers on the king's side, who had no mind to a cessation, formalized much upon.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 148.

FORMALLY,* adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of bondage.

Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people.

Hosker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it.

South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows.

Hp. Southside.

FORMATION,* n. s. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of mountains.

Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus.

Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them.

Watts on the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorian, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth true amender.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

FORMATIVE,* adj. [from formo, Latin.]
Having the power of giving form;
plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the material formation of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the inconstant plant cannot be raised without need, by any formative power residing in the soil.

Bentley, Serm.

FORMER,* n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

No more; I have too much on't,
Too much by you, ye whetters of my follies,
Ye angel-formers of my sin, but Devils!

Bacon, and Fl. Valentinian.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses.

Ray on the Creation.

FORMER.† adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formist, now commonly written formist, as if derived from before. Formist is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place. Dr. Johnson.—This distinction is just, as to present usage. But it was not always so. Spenser uses "former feat" for the first adventure of one of his heroes, F. Q. v. x. 15. And again, in the sense of antérieur or fore, F. Q. vi. vi. 10. "Yet did her face and form parts profess a fair young maiden."]

1. Before another in time.

Thy air,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:—a third is like the former. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of so ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast. The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY.† adv. [from former.]

1. In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal malis, formery being, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

2. At first. Obsolete.

Her fair locks, which formerly were bound up in one knot.

She low down did loose. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 67.

FORMFUL.† adj. [from form and full.] Ready to create forms; imaginative.

As fleets the vision of the formful brain, This moment hurrying wild the impulsion's soul, The ocean to nothing lost. Thomson, Summer.

FORMICATION.* n. s. Latin, formicatio, from formica, a pismire.] A sensation like that of the creeping or stinging of ants.

One of the most considerable signs of the disorder [spasmus] is a sense of formication.

Dr. James, Med. Diet.

FORMIDABLE.† adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabilis, French.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

Such an accident that afflicts him is an evil, and such an object formidable.

Dr. Taylor, Lib. of Prop. § 13.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages before.

Dryden, En. Dedie.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight, And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chose to shew the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish. Dec. of Piety.

FORMIDABLY.† adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! 'e'en to remotest shores,

A conquering navy proudly spread;

The British cannon formidably roar. Dryden.

To FORMIL.* v. a. [from formil, Sax. a bargain.] To order. "Formild, ordered, bespoke." Craven Dial. 1824.

FORMLESS.† adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,

Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare, R. John.

Countless multitudes

Of formless curms, projects unmade-up,

Abuses yet unfinish'd. Dunne, Poems, p. 95.

The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiful reprobate to the mass.

Hammond, Works, iv. 510.

FORMOSITY.* [old Fr. formosité, beauté; Latin, formositas.] Beauty; fairness.

Cocheran.

FORMULA.* n. s. [Latin.] A prescribed form or order.

There are certain formulae of prayer to be used here they make the inspection, which they term a call.

FORMULARY.† n. s. [from formulaire, from formula.]

1. A prescribed model; a form usually observed.

In the practice of all law, the formularies have been few, and certain; and not varied according to every particular case. Bacon on a Libel in 1599. These poems abound with modern words, and modern formularies of expression.

2. A book containing stated forms.

By way of innovating still further on our established formularies, he versified the decalogue.

Warton, Hist. of Poet. lib. 168.

FORMULARY.† adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. s. [from formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

To FORMICATE.† v. n. [French, formiquer, from formica, Latin, an arch, or vault; and also a beetle-hole; such places being anciently in vaults. Milton apparently uses the word formicated with a view to this double meaning. See FORMICATED.] To commit lewdness.

The heretical spirit of Luther—chose rather to be an honest husband than a formicating friar.

Dr. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 42.

FORMICATED.* adj. [from formicate.] Polluted by fornication.

She gives up her body to a mercenary whoredom under those formicated arches.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Con. B. 2.

FORNICATION.† n. s. [from fornicatio, French; fornication, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door.

Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of fœces at best. Grouse.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playdest the harlot, because of thy renown, and poudest out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

3. Among builders, a kind of arching or vaulting. [Latin, fornicatio, from the verb fornico.] This word is erroneously printed, in some editions of Chamber's Cyclopædia, fornication, and is so continued in Dr. Ash's vocabulary.

FORNICATOR. n. s. [from fornicator, French; from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour.

Dr. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

Let her the fornicatress be remord'd; See her have needful but not slavish means.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

To FORNATE.* v. n. [for and pass.] To go by; to pass unnoticed.

Scarce can a bishopric forpass them by, But that it must be felt in privacy.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

To FORNISE.* v. a. [for and pine.] To waste away.

Through long anguish, and self-murdering thought,

He was so wasted and forpined quite, That all his substance was consum'd to naught.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5. 57.

To FORRAY.* v. a. [from forray, French, "to forage, prey, forray, ravage, &c." Coignac. The same meaning is assigned to the French fourrer; low Latin, forare.] To ravage; to spoil a country.

They themselves were evil groots, they said, U'ownt with herds to watch, or pasture sheep, But to forray the land, or scour the deer.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 40.

They that morn had forraid all the land. Faifair, Tass. lib. 14.

FORRAY.* n. s. [from the verb. In the Border History forray is similar to inroad.] The act of ravaging, or making hostile incursion upon a country.

In deed of night, when all the thieves did rest, After a late forray, and sleep full sound, Sir Calidore him arm'd. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 42.

To FORSAKE.† v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsooken, or forsoaken [Saxon, forþacan; forsoeken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul: the room in his heart wild passions took. Unclay.

Oracles come in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cooks apace; Prevent his falsehood, and forsoke him first:

I know you hate him. A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield Thy avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield, Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state, Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.

Dryden, En.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their place took. Dryden, Ovid.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsook of all sight the left the shore. Dryden.
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seen empty and forsoaken,
And draw the wood ring gazers eyes on more.

FORSAKE. n. s. [from forsoke.] Deserter; one that forsakes.
Thou dost deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsoakers of God.
Song of the Three Children, Apocryph. v. 9.
FORSAKING. n. s. [from forsoke.] De-reliction.
Until there be a great forsoaking in the midst of the land. Isaiah, vi. 12.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. [for and say.]
1. To renounce.
But shepherd must walk another way,
Sike worldly soverance he must forsoy.
Spenser, Ep. C. May.

2. To forbid.
And sitthen shepherds been forsoyed
From places of delight. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

TO FORSLACK. v. a. [for and slack.]
To delay. See TO FORSLACK.
Ne rested he himself —
For dread of danger not to be redrest,
If he for slough forsock so farous. Spenser, Ep. C. vi. ix.

TO FORSOLOV. v. s. See TO FORSLOW.
FORSOLOV. ad. v. [forsoke, Sax.]
1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore tell Lyander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me forsooth, affection! Shakespeare.
A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Henry VIII.
Unlearned persons use such letters as justify express the power or sound of their speech; yet
forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.
Addison, Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen ciceronis that Cicero speaks of.

It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed
for the French madam.
FO'ASTEN. n. s. A forester. So used by Chaucer, who also writes the word fo'ster.
See FOSTER.

An horse be here, the baudrik was of grette:
A forster was he sothely as I grette.
Chaucer, C. T. Pro.

TO FORSPEAK. v. s. See the second and third senses of TO FORSPEAK.

TO FORSPEAK. v. s. See the third sense of
TO FORSPEAK.

FORSWAT. v. s. adj. [for and wat, from
swat.] Overwearied; spent with heat.
See FORSWAT.
Alto forsworn and forsoat I am.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsoware; part.
forsoverin. [forsoepian, forsoepien, Sax.]
1. To renounce upon oath.
I firmly vowe
Never to wooe her more; I but do forsover her,
As ooe unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.
And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forsover most monstrously to have.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forsover his gold!
Dryden, Ju-

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forsover himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.
To leave my Julia, shall I be forsover?
To leave fair Silvia, shall I be forsover?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsover?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provoke me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.
Ooe says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsover, that wrongs both land and laws.
Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thee;
And yet an false forsover; the hell-wild shrike,
That heard the swear, is witness to my falsehood.
Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurt upon their heads that break his law.
— And that same vengeance doth hurt on thee,
For false forsovering, and for murder too.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

FORSWEARER. n. s. [from forsover.] One who is perjured.

FORSWORK. n. s. [for and work, from work.] Overlaboured.
Alto forsover and forsworn I am,
Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

FORSWORNNESS. n. s. [Sax. forsoepien.]
The state of being forsworn. Manning.

FORTE. n. s. [fort, Fr.]
1. A fortified house; a castle.
They erected a fort, which they called the fort de For; and from thence they bolded like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend.
Wallar.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.
Denham, Syph.

My fury does, like jealous fortis pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.
Dryden.

2. A strong side, in opposition to foible; probably, as Mr. Bagshaw also supposes, adopted from the terms of the fencing-school; fort being applied to the strong part of the foil. See FOIBLE.
We thus say, it is a man's fort, meaning that in which he excels. The French use, what comes near it, "le fort d'une affaire, the chiefest point in the hardest part of a business." Colgrave in V.

FORT.

FORTE. adv. [Italian.] In music, loudly, with strength and spirit.

FORTE. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert houses.
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shaks. Mens. for Mens.

FORTH. adv. [forþ, Saxon; whence further and furthest.] The Saxon word is from the old French for, (modern, hors), as that is from the Latin foras,
Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Forward; onward in time.
From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her come. Spenser, F. Q.

It came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work.
Nehem. ix. 16.

2. Forward in place or order.
Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.
Whist.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
For Bitias' death. Dryden, S.

3. Abroad; out of doors.
Uncle, I must come forth. Shaks. Othello.
I have no mind of leaving forth tonight. Shaks.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth? Shakespeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dry. Virg.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.
They will prevail relieve their friends that are forth; they will sell the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privately upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.
Shakespeare.

5. Out into a public character; public view.
You may set forth the same with farmhouses.
Pemham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave propitious end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.
Out of use.
You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shaks.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.
Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no farther than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.
I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquirer bade me say forth;
I said I was taught on more. Memoir in Strype.

9. Away; be gone; go forth.
Artisan, that best knowest
How to draw out, fit to this enterprise,
The prin't of fast proceeding, and the number
To carry such a business; forth, and lery
Our worst instruments. Bacon.

FORTH. prep. Out of.
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomefret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know.

Shakspeare.

FORTH.* n. s. [Su. Goth. forth, a common way; Welsh, fford; Cornish, ford; Germ. furt.] A way; "a forth, or a cart-way." Ort. Vocab. 1514. Not now in use.

FORTHCOMING.* adj. [forth and coming. Saxon, forþ-cūman.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost; not suffered to escape.

Carry this mud knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakspeare, Tem. of the Storm.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

But why do they lodge there? —

That they may be safe and forthcoming.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

TO FORTH.* v. a. [for and think; Germ. forthencan.] To repent of; to be sorry for. Prompt. Parvulorum; to unthink.

Of it be not too boldy,

Least thou forthink it when art too old.

Old Interlude of Youth.

Then can he think, perforce with sword and large

Her forth to fetch, and Proteus to constrain;

But soon he can gash fully to forth again.

Shakspeare, F. Q. iv. xii. 14.

FORTH'SUING. adj. [forth and issue.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthsuing thus, she gave him first to wield

A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd.

And double edg'd. Pope, Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind.

Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself.

Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in forthright;

For still to all the gate stood open wide.

Shakspeare, F. Q.

Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey.

Dryden.

FORTHRIGHT. n. s. A straight path.

Here's a maze road, indeed,

Through forthright and menders. Shakspeare, Temp.

FORTHWARD.* adv. In our old authors this word is used for forward.

He promyseth to them that go forthward and profite in it [penance] joye. Sp. Fisher, Ps. 25.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delays; at once; strait.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste, Unto his guest; who, after troublous sight,

And dreams, can now to take more sound repeat.

Shakspeare.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrated.

Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dully or process the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire.

Darwin on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,

The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,

The rattling drums. Daniel, Civil Wars.

The winged heralds, by command
Of our reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held.

At Pandemonium. Milton, P. L.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived.

South.

FORTHY.* adv. [Sax. forþu.] Therefore. A common word with Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer. Now obsolete.

Thou shalt have no care forthy;

Myself will have a double eye;

Vike to my flocke and thine.

Shakspeare, Step. Cal. March.

Faire laly, through foule sorrow ill beghit,

Great pity is to see you thus dismay'd,

And marre the blossom of your beauty bright;

Forthy appeare your grief and heavy plight,

And tell the cause of your conceived payne.

Shakspeare, F. Q. iii. 14.

FORTHETH. adj. [from forth.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail

To be the fortheth man in an entail? Doune.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortheth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part.

Swift.

FORTHIFIABLE.* adj. [fortifiable, French.] What may be fortified.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FORTIFICATION. n. s. [fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary.

Harris.

The Physicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification.

Johnson, on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

The bounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the unlimbness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.

Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage.

Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used. To strengthen the infested ports, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.

Gos. of the Tongue.

FORTHIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifiers of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who after had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution.

Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dominance he strongly fortifies.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging.

Eccles. i. 14.

3. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires.

Sidney.

To fortify the former opinions. Toutain adds, that fort which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.

Relph.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,

New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:

The heroine assum'd the woman's place,

Confirm'd her mind, and fortified her force.

Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues.

Locke.

TO FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places. Dr. Johnson cites the following passage from Milton as an illustration of this definition; but the verb here is active, and means to strengthen the dark abyss by the works constructed.

Time us improv'd.

To fortify thus far, and overlay,

With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

Milton, P. L.

FORTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin,

Naught fear'd their force that fortilage to win.

Shakspeare.

In all straight and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight.

Shakspeare on Fort.

FORTIN. n. s. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege.

Thou hast talk'd

Of palisades, fortins, parapets. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

FORTITUDE. n. s. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king, becoming graces,

Devotion, patience, courages, fortitude,

I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The better fortitude

Of patience, and heroic martyrdom

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man.

Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that 'virtue, even in this world, might not lose her reward.

Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wields his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,

To join with witches and the help of hell!

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

FORTLE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peopetynne night, Saxon.] It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights; thus we say, this day seven night. So Tacitus, "Non dicunt numerum ut nos, sed noctium computum." The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight.

Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, till about a fortnight before.

FORTRESS. n. s. [forteresse, French.]
A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.

The tramp of death sounds in their bearing shell!
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.

God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

There is no such way to give defence to shroud doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet make these retrains more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

TO FORTRESS.* v. a. [from the noun.]
To guard; to fortify.

Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortresses from a world of harms.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Our own word was originally fortuit. Chaucer uses it in his translation of Boethius. So late as in 1656 fortuitous was thought, according to Heylin, new and uncouth. Fortuit was not then dissuad. Sir K. Digby employs that word. Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,

Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.]
Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly dissolved into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. s. [from fortuitous.]
Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUITV.* n. s. [from fortuit, Fr. and Eng. See the etym. of Fortuitous.]
Chance; accident.

The only question, which the adversaries to Providence have to answer is, How they can be sure, that those deserv'd judgements were the effect of mere fortuity, without the least intervention on the part of the Lord of the universe?

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.]
Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to misfortune. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merely accompany you home.

He sigh'd; and could not but that fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before.

Drayden, Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right;
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss;
But right before him is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing
miss.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.]
Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wise, and fortunately great.

FORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.]
Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness.

FORTUNE. n. s. [fortuna, Lat. fortune, Fr.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day:
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among to have a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.

The adequate measuring of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune.

4. Success, good or bad; event.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and beldness of many navigators.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give.

5. Estate; possessions.

As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes.

That eyesless head of thine was first from th' loath
To raise my fortunes.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit.

6. The portion of a man or woman; generally of a woman.

I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the new sparks that go a fortune stealing.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view.

When mis delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get.

7. Fortuity; future events.

You who men's fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me;
But mark her face, and all the features beed;
For only there is writ my destiny.

TO FORTUNE.* v. a. [Old Fr. fortune, "prosperer," Lacombe; Lat. fortunare.]
1. To make fortunate. This is a very old English expression; and is still sometimes used in conversation for endowing with a fortune.

Well could he fortune the ascendant
Of his images for his patient.

2. To dispose of fortunately; or not.

Right thus to Mars he said his orison:
O strange god, that thus —
Of arms all the bride in thine hand,
And then fortune as these list devise,
Accept of me pious sacrifice.

3. To presage. Not in use.

Fortune fortune'd the dying fate of Rome,
Till I her counsel sole consol'd her doom.

TO FORTUNE.* v. n. [from the noun.]
To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass; to light upon.

If fortune'd, as fair it then befall,
Behind his back, unexpecting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a spring well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.

It fortune'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortune'd.

Here fortune'd Curt to slide.

Had he once fortune'd upon the least notion of that excellent manner.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew
Of the full fortune'd Caesar ever shall
Be brook'd with me.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. s. [fortune and book.]
A book consulted to know fortune, or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look
Beauty lay open love's lawless fate;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The observant motions of love's fate.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. s. [fortune and hunt.]
A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune-hunters and fortunetellers.

The tranquility and correspondence of the company begins to be interrupted by the arrival of Sir Taffey Trippet, a fortunehunter, whose follies are too gross to give diversion, and whose vanity is too stupid to let him be sensible that he is a publick offence.

You let loose another species of avarice, that of the fortune-hunter.

Bill for Reg. of the Marriage Act.

FORTUNELESS.* adj. [fortune and less.]
1. Luckless.

All hard mishaps and fortuneless misadventure.

2. Without an estate; without a portion.

TO FORTUNELESS.* v. n. [fortuneless and tell.]
1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortune-tell you.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his casting drone-pipe seem'd
The mystical figures of her hand —
He tips the palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines.

FOR'TUNTELLER. n. s. [fortune and teller.]
One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.
They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villano,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller.

Shakespeare.
A Welshman being at a school-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Shew, Apophthegm.
Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot?

Dugges, Rules for Devotion.
There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller.

L' Estrange.
Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what owe befell her. Swift.
To FOR'TUNIZE. v. a. [from fortune.]
To regulate the fortune of. A word perhaps peculiar to Spenser.

Wisdom is most riches: footes therefore
They are, which fortunes doe by vices derive;
Still each unto himself his life may fortune.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. li. 30.
FORTY. adj. [foorteytz, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could best forty of them.
Shakespeare, Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better, 'tis forty to one loses. L' Estrange.

FORUM. n. s. [Latin.] Any publick place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watson on the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And o'er a firm bank'd with marble shines
Where the bold youth, the sun's rums' tates to store,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar.

Pope.
To FORW'NDER. v. n. [for and wander.]
To wander wildly and weirdly.

The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they say'd
A weary night forward'ring by the way.

Spenser, F. Q.
FORW'NDERED. v. adj. [for and wander.]
Lost; bewildered.

And being thus alone, and all forlorn,
A maid the thicke, forward'nd in despair,
As one dismay'd. Mir. for Mag. p. 447.

FORWARD.† adj. [forpeap, Sax. Sa. Goth. for, before, forward, and M. Goth. twairit, towards. "Vox in omnibus dialect. Celto-Seyth. conspicua." Serenius.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When ferrent sorrow slaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass.

Spenser, F. Q.
From smaller things the mind of the hearer
May go forward to the knowledge of greater,
and climb up from the lowest to the highest things.

Hooker.
He that is used to go forward, and findeth a step, faileth off his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon, Essays.

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]
1. Warm; earnest; not backward.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.
You'll still be too forward.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.
Unkild'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.
Old Hutes' form he took, Anchises squire,
New left to rule Aeneasius by his sire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years.

Dryden.
4. Not reserved; not over modest.
'Tis a per'ous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
5. Premature; early ripe.
Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.
6. Quick; ready; hasty.
The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior; opposed to posterior.
Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees
Th' insensible and scisselous foot of time
Stals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.
My good Cassilio,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' the rear of our birth. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

To FOR'WARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]
1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.
As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.
2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARD.† n. s. [from forward.] One who promotes any thing. Sherwood.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.]
Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turn we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atterbury.

FORWARDNESS. n. s. [from forward.]
1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hooker.

It is so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a blemish to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hooker.

The great ones were in forwardness, the people in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible effection. Bacon.

2. Quickness; readiness.
He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness: that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance.

Addison on Italy.
FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively; not backward.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backward and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Dregumans. Arbutnot on Cuias.

To FORW'ARD.† v. a. [for and ward.]
To desolate; to destroy. Not now in use.

That infernal fiend with feul uprose
Forwarded all their great. Spenser, F. Q.
Vespasian, with great spoil and rags,
Forwarded all. Spenser, F. Q.

To FORW'ARD.† v. a. [for and ward.]
To despirit with labour.

By your toil,
And labour long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forwarded by; therefore a while
I rede you rest, and to your bowers recede.

Spenser, F. Q.
Whose labour'd spirits,
Forwarded in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

Shakespeare, J. Kohn.
FORWARD. n. s. [Sax. forpeap, and fopepeap.] A promise; what was before said or agreed to. Not now in use.

He that wise was and obedient
To kepe his forward by his free assent.

Claudian, C. T. Prod.
FOSS.† n. s. [fossa, Latin; fos, Welsh; fos or fos, French; fosse, old French.] A ditch; a moat.

Let Titius
Command the company that Pontius lost,
And see the fosses deeper. Bonum, & Fl. Valentin.

The steep-cliffed summits, roughly crown'd
With many a frowning foss and airy moor.

Warton, Od. xix.
In the same Cartulary, many boundaries, ways, and fosses, are specified in the neighbourhood of Wilton. Warton, Hist. of Kidlington, p. 66.

FO'SSET. See FAUCET.

FO'SWAY. n. s. [fos and way.] One of the great Roman roads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FO'SSIL.† adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French. Our own adjective was formerly, and is now often written fossile.] Which may be dug out of the earth.

Learned men long conceived it a bluminous and fossil body. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 10.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.
Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemmæ, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of spring, or that of the sea, when pure.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.
It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
FO'SSIL. n. s. In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals.

Locke.

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped.

Brewster.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in water; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole.

Hill, Met. Met.

Those bodies which will melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils.

Pemberton.

FOSSILIST. * n. s. [from fossil.] One who studies the nature of fossils; one who collects fossils.

If I may be allowed to assume the liberty, in which fossils are often indulged.

Phil. Transact. vol. 50. P. 11. (1759). p. 596.

It is well shaded by tall ash-trees, of a species, as Mr. James the fossilist informed me, uncommonly valuable.

Johnson, Journ. West. Islands.

TO FOSTER.† v. a. [porten, Saxon; foster, Icelandic, probably from the Gr. φύω, to feed.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood, which is both fostered.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

That base wretch,
Bred but on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps o' the court. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
Some say that rears foster-foreign children.

Johnson, Antiquities.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.

Danvers on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless native
Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation.

Cleveland.

The son of Mulchire
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns.

Dryden, En.

2. To pamper; to encourage.

A prince of great courtesy and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;

Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend.

Thomson.

TO FOSTER.† v. n. To be nursed together; to be trained up together.

Other great houses there be of the English in Ireland, which through licentious covering with the Irish, or marrying, or fostering with them, have degenerated.

Spenser on Ireland.

FOSTER.† n. s. [old Fr. foster, a park-keeper.] Kelham. So Barret gives our own word; foster, a keeper of a forest.

Alv. 1580. Used also by Chaucer and the romance-writers.† A forester; an inhabitant of the forest.

and fosterage of this child. Bolingbroke, History.

FOSTERBROTHER.† n. s. [porten broðer, Saxon.] One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

I am tame and bred up with my friends,
Which are my foster-brothers.

Brown and Fl. Meid's Tragedy.

FOSTERCHILD. n. s. [porten cild, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers.

Danvers on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild.

Addison, Ovid.

FOSTERDAM. n. s. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf were laid the martial twins:
Intrep on her swelling dogs they hung;

The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue;

Dryden, En.

FOSTEREARTH. n. s. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing ground
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;

But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails!

Philips.

FOSTER.† n. s. [from foster.] 1. A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosters;
the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.

Danvers on Ireland.

2. An encourager; a forwarder.
The fosterer of shooting is labour.

Johnson, Tompkins.

The fosterer and cherisher of truth.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 10.

Cochran.

FOSTERMOTHER.† n. s. [portpenmoter, Sax.] A nurse.

That child, that receiveth nutriment from his foster-mother, will go near to sympathize with her in condition. St. M. Sandy, En. (1634). p. 157.

FOSTERNURSE. n. s. [foster and nurse.] This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same.] A nurse.

Our foster-nurse of nature is reason,
The which she lacks.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FOSTERSHIP.† n. s. [from foster, a fosterer.] The office of a forester; which is the old word for forestorship.

Adam—held, by the charter of Hugh earl of Chester, in the name of a fostership, M.S. Harl. 1505, a blunder, I presume, for forestership.

Churton, Life of Sir R. Btton, p. 406. n.

FOSTERSON. n. s. [foster and son.] One fed and educated, though not the son by nature.

Mature in years, to ready honours move;
O of celestial seed! O foster-son of Jove!

Dryden, Virg.

FOSTRESS.† n. s. [from foster.] A nurse. Glory of knights, and hope of all the earth,
Come forth, your fostress bids; who from your birth
Hath bred you to this hour.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

FO'THER.† n. s. [Sax. foþer, as fixtara foþa, sixty loads; German, fuder, a cart-load, fuhren, to carry.] A load; a large quantity. Fudder is so used in the north of England. A fother of lead is still a term for a certain weight, about as much as a cart would carry.

With him there was a plowman, was his brother,
That had yield of doeg full many a fother.

Chaucer, C. T. Pro.

FOUGADE. n. s. [French.] In the art of war, a sort of little mine in the manner of a well, scarce more than ten feet wide and twelve deep, dug under some work or fortification, and charged with barrels or sacks of gunpowder to blow it up, and covered over with earth.

Dict.

FOUGHT. The preterite and participle of fight.

Though unknown to me, they sure fought well,
Whom Rupert led, and who were British born.

Dryden.

FOUGHTEN.† [The passive participle of fight.] Rarely used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Milton.

But it was common. Bishop Lowth objected to this participle, as not agreeable to the analogy of derivation, which obtains in irregular verbs in ght. It is the Teut. vechten.† Contested; disputed by arms.

As in this glorious and well-foughten field.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

In seven brave foughten fields.

Dryden, Polyd. S. 12.

The adverbs fighten and vechten are tales of foughten fields, of martial scars, and things done long ago.

Brown and Fl. Laws of County.

On the foughten field
Michael and his angel, prevalent
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watchmen round
Cherubich waving fires.

Milton, P. L.

FOUL.† adj. [Su. Goth. ful; M. Goth. fuls; Fr. Théotisc. ful; Sax. ful. See To FILE and FILTH.]

1. Not clean; filthy; dirty; miry. Through most of its significations it is opposed to fair.

My face is foul with weeping. Job. xvi. 16.

It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain,
And it grows fouler. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

He that can travel in deep and foul ways, ought not to say that he cannot walk in fair.

Tillotson.

The stream is full with strains
Of rushing torrents and descending rills. Addison.

2. Impure; polluted; full of filth.

n 2

With fool moods,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Kill thy physician, and the foe bestow
Upon the foul disease. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Intemperance and sensuality debate men's minds, clog their spirits, and make them gross, fool, listless, and inactive. Tillemont.

5. Wicked; detestable; abominable.
Jesus rebuked the fool spirit. St. Mark, ix. 25.
He hates fool leavings and vile flattery.
Two filthy blots in noble gentility. Spenser, Husb. Tale.

This is the grossest and most irrational supposition, as well as the foolest stichon, that can be imagined. Hilde.

Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foolest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.

4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.
By fool play were we heard'd thence,
But blessedly help'd liether. Shakespeare, Tempest.

5. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.
Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain. Spenser, F. Q.

Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop! Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fool sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of fool-things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those fool sights do not much offend. Hume.

All things that seem so fool and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

6. Disgraceful; shameful.
Too well I see and read the dire events,
That with sad overthrow and fool defeat
Hath lost us here. Milton, P. L.

Who first seduc'd them to that fool revolt?
Milton, P. L.

Reason half extinct,
Or impotent, or else approving soon
The fool disorder. Thomson, Spring.

7. Coarse; gross.
You will have no notion of delicacies, if you table with them; they all for rank and fool feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking.
Fitzon on the Classics.

8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter;
wanting purgation or modification.
You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How fool it is; what rank diseases grow
And with what danger near the heart of it.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

9. Not bright; not serene.
It will be fool weather to day; for the sky is red and lowering. St. Matt. xvi. 3.

Who's there besides fool weather?
One minded like the weather, most iniquity.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Be fair or fool, or rain or shine,
The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.

10. With rough force; with unseasonable
violence.
So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Fool is a tempter on their admiral. Walter.

In his sallies their men might fall fool of each other. Clarendon.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall fool upon his laws. South.

11. [Among seamen.] Entangled; as, a rope is fool of the anchor.

12. [Among seamen.] Unfavourable; contrary to the course of the ship; as, a fool wind.

13. [Among seamen.] Dangerous; as,
the fool ground of a road, sea-coast, or bay, i. e. abounding with shallows, or rocky, or in any respect dangerous.

To FOUL. v. a. [fyhan, Saxon.] To daub;
to blemish; to make filthy; to dirty.

Seep your walks from autumnal leaves, lest the worms draw them into their holes, and fool
your gardens. Evelyn.

While Traulus all his ordure scatters,
To fool the man he chiefly flatters. Swift.

She fools a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

To FOULDER.* v. n. [fr. fouldroyer, "to cast or dart thunderbolts; hence also to beat down with great violence all that comes in the way." Cotgrave. Mr. Church, a commentator on Spenser, is for substituting smouldring in the example, and for dismissing fouldring as an useless repetition, because fouldring occurs just before it. This is not to be admitted. The poet's fouldring heat is burning heat.] To emit great heat.

Loud thunder with amazement great
Did rend the rattling sky with flames of fouldring heat. Spenser, F. Q. li. 20.

FOULFACED. adj. [foul and faced.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If black scandal, or foolish d reproach,
Attend the serpent of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall requite me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakespeare, Richard III.

FOULFEEDING.* adj. [foul and feeding.]
Gross; of coarse food.

There is an appetitus carnis, that passing by wholesome viands, falls upon unmet and fool- feeding morbid. H. Hall, Fashions of the World.

FO'LLY. adv. [from fool.]
1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.
2. In the world's wide mouth.

Live scandalis'd, and foolly spoken of.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The letter to the protector was glided over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foolly set forth his obstinacy, avarice and ambition. Bayard.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foolly wrong'd him; do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.
Thou play'st not foolly for't. Shakespeare.

FOULMOUTHED. adj. [foul and mouth.]
Scurrilous; habituated to the use of obprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would scour'd us in his mouth. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It was allowed by every body, that no fool- mouth'd witness ever appeared in any cause.
Addison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foolmouth'd accusation as he. Arbutnot.

No singing drill, and scolding off between,
Scolds answer foolmouth'd scolds; had neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FO'ULNESS. n. s. [from foul.]
1. The quality of being fool: filthiness; naughtiness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foolness of other clouds are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins, Met. Magic.

2. Pollution; impurity.
It is so vicious blot, murder, or foolness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foolness; it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatefulness; atrociousness.
Convi, you are too mild;
The foolness of some facts thence all mercy. B. Jonan.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foolness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.
He by an affliction sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foolness. Sidney.

He's fallen in love with your foolness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. Shaks. As you like it.

The fury laid aside
Her looks and limbs, and with new methods try'd
The foolness of th' infernal form to hide. Dry. Ea.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.
Fidelity is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity and all falshood or foolness of intentions; especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impy is wont to be disguised. Hemmund on Fundamentals.

FO'ULSPOKEN.* adj. [foul and spoken.]
Contumelious; slanderous.

Foulspoken coward, that thunder'd with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dost perform! T. Autronicus.

FO'UMART.* n. s. [ful, Su. Goth. and old Fr. ful, stinking, and mart, a kind of weasel; martes, Lat.] A polecat. See
FITCHET.

Foxes and foumarts, with all other vermines.
Archdean, Turpin.

FO'UNART.* n. s. [ful, Su. Goth. and old Fr. ful, stinking, and mart, a kind of weasel; martes, Lat.] A polecat. See
FITCHET.

Foxes and foumarts, with all other vermines.
Archdean, Turpin.

FOUND. The preterite and participle passive of find.

I am sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not. Is. lxx. 1.

Authors now find, as once Achilles found,
The whole is mortal if a part's unsound. Young.

To FOUND. v. a. [findare, Latin; fonder,
French.]

1. To lay the basis of any building.
It fell not; for it was found upon a rock. Mat. vii.

He hath found it upon the sea, and esta-blish'd it upon the floods. Ps. xiv. 2.

2. To build; to raise.
Thence came of reason are Amphion's lyre,
Wherewith he built the Theban city found. Danvers.

They Gabian walls, and strong Eidons rear,
Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found,
And raise Colasian tow'rs on rocky ground. Dryden, Kn.

3. To establish; to erect.
This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found
Their government, and their great senate choose,
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by law ordain'd. Milton, P. L.

He *found*ing a library, gathered together
the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac. ii. 13.

4. To give birth or original to; as, he *found*ed an art; he *found*ed a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.
Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is *found*ed in grace;

were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method.

Deroy of Penty.

A right to the use of the creature is founded originally in the right a man has to subsist. Locke.
Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has right by that contract. Locke.
The reputation of the illud they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope, Pref. to the Hind.

6. To fix firm.
Fluence is escap'd.
— Then comes any fit again: I had else been perfect,
While as the marble, founded as the rock.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FOUND. v. a. [funderer, Latin; fondre, French.] To turn by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.
A second multitude
With wonderful art founded the uneasy ore,
Severing each kind, and acumin'd the bullion dross.

Milton, P. L.

FOUNDATION. n. s. [fondation, French.]
1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which supports up the arms, that root which ministereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker.
That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation,
To bury all.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Foundations fly the wretched; say, I mean,
Where they should be relieved? Shakespeare, Coriol.
I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call.

Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of fixing the basis.
Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.

Tickell.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.
If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds.

Milton.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation to nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.
Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.
He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation.

Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.
FOUNDATIONLESS. * adj. [foundation and less.] Without foundation.

A flattering, fallacious, foundationless, because unconditional, hope; which the bigger it swells, the more dangerous it proves.

Hammond, Works, iv. 506.

FOUNDER. n. s. [from found.]
1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the election of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town.

Walker.

Nor was Prætorius's founder wanting there,
Whom fate reports the son of Mulciber.

Dryde.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wailing orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founder's charity in the dust laid low.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.
And the rude notions of pedantic schools
Disparage the sacred founder of our races.

Racine.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles.

Addison, Freeholder.

Nor can the skillful herald trace
The founder of the ancient race.

Swift.

4. [Funderer, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so perversers to their pewter, to make it sound more clear like silver.

Greve, Museum.

- To FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.] To cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set on the ground.

Fluebad's steeds are founder'd,
Or tight kept chain'd below. Shakespeare, Tempest.
I have founder'd nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight; but what that he saw me and yielded. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high as any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-foot'd racers of the flood.

Brutus died out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-bar'd gate.

Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain.

Swift, Direct. to the Groom.

Men of discretion, whom power in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs; and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious.

Swift.

- To FOUNDER.† v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]
1. To sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm.

2. To fail; to miscarry.
In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physic
After his patient's death. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To trip; to fall. Applied to a horse.
His horse fear began to turn
And leapt aside, and founder'd as he leapt.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

It chanc'd air Satyrane his steed at last,
Whether through foundering, or through sodden fears,
To stumble, that his rider might be cast.

Spenser, F. Q.

- FOUNDEROUS. * adj. [fondre, Fr. 'destruere, ruiner,' Borel. Cotgrave renders fondrière 'a bog or quagmire.'] This word occurs in our acts of parliament concerning the high-ways. Whoever indicts or presents a road, swears that it is founderous, or in a founderous state. This implies failing, not equal to use, ruinous.

I have travelled through the negotiation, and a founderous road it is.

Burke, Letter on a Regicide Plot, l. 33.

FOUNDER. n. s. [fonderie, French, from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a casting-house.

FOUNDERING. n. s. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.

Sidney.

I pass the founding by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, to whom matrons make their home,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

Dryden, Juv.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.

Addison.

The goodness long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art.

Gay, Trivia.

FOUNDER.† n. s. [from founder.]
1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, causes, or begins any thing. Mr. Mason is ridiculously angry with Dr. Johnson for shortening foundress in the example of the next definition from Spenser, and also contends that foundress, in the example from Dryden, is only a poetical contraction. He has offered no other example either of foundresses or foundress. The word foundress is common in both senses.

Forgetful of himself, his birth, his country,
Friends, and all,
And only minding (whom he mist) the foundress of his fall.

Werner, Albion's England.
Pride—became the first preceptor of God's lessening his family, and the foundation of hell.

Osborne, Advice to a Son, p. 28.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.
Far of their order she was patroness,
Altho' Charities was their chief foundress.

Spenser, F. Q.

For all she likes, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too.

Dryde.

The great foundress of the Pietists, Madame de Bourignon.

Tutor, No. 126.

Against the north wall of the north cross is erected a stone monument for Sir John Trussell, and Maud his wife, who were the founder and foundress of this church.

Johnson, B. H. 487.

FOUNTER.† n. s. [from fons, Latin; fountain, French; fontana, low Latin, fontation, anc. Prov.]

1. A well; a spring.
He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine;
Ambrosial fruits fetch'd from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink.

Milton, P. R.

2. A small basin of springing water.
Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Cru a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf.
By Taylor.
 Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
 But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
 To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

Addison.

5. A jet; a spout of water.

But when the fountainful Ida's top they scold'd with utmost haste,
 All fall upon the high-hair'd oaks.
Clayman, Rhoda.

TO FOUE.† v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. He would not have said, that it ever was in use, if he had consulted the editions of the book, from which he cites the example. The first edition of Camden's Remains in 1605 reads soupe. A very incorrect edition of 1637 reads foupe, but it is corrected in the improved one of 1674. See TO SOUP.

Dr. Ash gravely admits soupe into his vocabulary. The following is the passage, in which the mistaken word occurs, as given by Dr. Johnson, but now with more than one correction. To soup is to draw, to breathe out.
 We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as [twenty], smoothly, and moderately, as any of the northern nations, who [are noted to] foupe [say] their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits.
Camden, Rem. on Languages.

FOUR. adj. [from four, Sax. fidwor, Goth. quator, Latin.] The twice two.

FRAGRANCY. } Sweetness of smell;
pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Ever separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood Half-spy'd. Milton, P. L.

I am more pleas'd to survey my roves of celestials and cablings springing up in their full fragrance and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine: to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrancies around. Pope, Odyssey.

FRAGRANT.† adj. [fragrant, Fr. fragrant, Lat.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild. Milton, P. L.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRAGRANTLY, adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

FRAIL.† adj. [old Fr. fraille, i. e. fragile, brittle; from fragilis, Lat. Cotgrave and Roquet.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill. Darwin.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand.

Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may be amiss, then may those also speak amiss:
man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Dr. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

FRAILNESS.† n. s. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

Such is the frailness of our nature.

Dr. Johnson, Works, iii. 54.

FRAILTY.† n. s. [from frail; Norm. Fr. frailté, Kelham.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.

Nor shouldst thou have trusted that to woman's frailty.

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel.

Milton, S. A.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Lure did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Kind winds will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

And Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like brutes in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Low.

FRASCHUR. n. s. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

To taste the frashur of the pure air. Dryden.

Which bew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came.

The labour of a god; and all along,
Tough iron plates were clench'd to, to make it strong. Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden, Juv.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton, Opticks.

3. Order; regularity; adjoined series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock, still a repairing, ever out of frame, And never going right. Shakspeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame: In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.
Clerodene.

5. Contrivance; projection.

Join the Bearard.
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies. Shaksp.

6. Mechanical construction.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.

FRAMER. n. s. [from frame; fremman, Sax.] Maker; former; contriver; schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were pre-determined. Hammond.

There was want of accuracy in experiments in the first original framer of those medals.
Arbutnot on Coins.

FRAMWORK. n. s. [frame and work.]

Work done in a frame.
Doublets a staunch and solid piece of fram-work. Milton, Areopagitica.

FRAMING. n. s. [from frame.] Adjoining together; as the framing of a house, i. e. the timber-work in it.

FRAMPOLD. adj. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original. Dr. Johnson.—It is written also frampal, or frampel, frampared, and framford; for they all are evidently the same word. Ray thinks that, like froward, it comes from the Sax. frem, our from.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakspere.

The frampal man could not be pacified.
Hacket, Life of Aph. Williams.

Is Pompey grown so malapert, so frampol?
Bosom, and Fl. Wit, at Sir. Wespone.

I pray thee, grow not frampold now.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

Like faithless wife, that by her frampold guise,
Peevish demesour, aullen and disdain,
Doth only deep the spright melancholias
Of her aggrieved husband.

Mere, Song of the Bowd, l. iii. 40.
As if a child should govern the house, because he will be frampold, and disquieted, otherwise!

Thorndike on Forbearance, &c. (1670), p. 83.

FRANCHISE. n. s. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them.
Darlet on Ireland.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.
Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser on Ireland.

To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear.
Shakspere, Macb.

2. To possess a right or privilege.

To speak franchis'd are,
Because we ver'd for power.
Mir. for Mag. p. 477.

FRANCHISEMENT. n. s. [from franchise.]

Release; freedom.

VOL. II.

To work Irena's franchisement.

And eke Grantorto's worthy punishment.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xl. 96.

FRANGIBLE. adj. [frangible, Fr. from frango, Lat.] Frangible; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will show itself very frangible.
Dryd.

FRANGENT. n. s. [Of this word I know not the derivation. Dr. Johnson.—It is not peculiar to Spenser, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites, but is used with the same epithet by Heywood. It may be merely a cant expression; or perhaps may be referred to the Goth. frijon, Sax. frenon, to love, whence our friend.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Stanley,
Fit mate for such a mining minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy;
Might not be found a franker frenon,
Of her low part to make companion.

Spenser, F. Q.
Heywood, Edw. IV. (1600), sign. c. 5.

FRANK. adj. [franc, Fr.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little morn,
For the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.
Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others.

'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing.
Exchange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

I shall have reason
To shew the love and duty, that I bear you,
With franker spirit. Shakspere, Othello.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And will care for all the rest to shift.
Spenser, Rubik. Tale.

We will that all the Jews, that either before or since have been taken and led away,—shall be sent frank and free.

4. Not restrained; licentious. Not in use.

Might not be found a franker transgression.
Spenser, F. Q.

5. Fatted; in good condition. [from franc, old Fr. a place to feed hogs in.] This seems to be the primary sense.

When they were once frank and fat they stood up together proudly against the Lord and his word.
Bale on the Revd. P. I. sign. I. iii.

FRANK. n. s. [Fr. franc, a frank or sty. Cotgrave. See the last sense of the adjective.]

You'll have immediately, by several franks, my apostle to lord Cobham.
Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.

To FRANK. v. a.

1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.

In the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in held.
Shakspere.

2. To feed high; to fatten; to cram.

Junius, and Ainsworth.
The husbandmen and farmers never frank them [hogs] above three or four months.

Hollingshed, Descript. of Brit. B. 3. p. 1096.
Our desire is rather to frank up ourselves with that which we should abhor.

Alp. Banda, Sermon, fol. 155. b.

3. To exempt letters from postage.

My lord Orville writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least frank'd by him.

Gazette's sent gratis down, and frank'd.
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. s. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almonie, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service.

FRANKCHISE. n. s. [frank and chase.]

A free chase; the liberty of free chase.

A forest is of so princely a tenure, that, according to our laws, none but the king can have a forest; if he chance to pass one over to a subject, 'tis no more forest, but frank-chase.

Hovell, Lett. iv. 16.

FRANKINCENSE. n. s. [frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Ezekiel.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brevetudine on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabaean bough.

Colour and frankincense, an od'rous pile,
Flam'd on the earth, and wide perfum'd the vale. Dryden, Virg.

FRANKLIN. n. s. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englished a gentleman servant. Not in use. So far Dr. Johnson.

But his definition is not correct, and the word is also common, though he cites only Spenser. A franklin is a freeholder of considerable property; and the name has given rise to that of many families in England.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walked in,
Where there does meet a franklin fine and free. Spenser, F. Q.

A franklin: his outside is an ancient yeoman of England; though his inside may give arms, (with the best gentleman,) and never see the herald.

Overbury, Character, sign. O. G.
There are many now grown into families, now called Franklins, who are men of the county of Middlesex, and other parts, magnis ditati possessionibus. Waterhouse, Comm. on Forc. &c. p. 388.

There's a franklin in the wild of Koot, hush brought three hundred marks with him in gold.

Shakespeare, H. IV. F. F. I.

She can start our franklin's daughters,
In their sleep, with shrieks and laughter.

B. Jonson, Entertainments.

FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,

I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

When they had nothing to say, he frankly forgave them both. B. Lisle, vol. 42.

By the roughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very freely give them fruit for their songs. Spectator.

2. Without constraint.

The lords imported their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly listed themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarendon.

3. Without reserve.

He entered very frankly into those new designs which were contrived at court. Clarendon.

FRANKNESS. n. s. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; inge-nuousness.

When the comde duke had some éclaircisse-ment with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unbecoming frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship; his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable to his sincerity and frankness; of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards.

Addison, Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.

3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The abbot sent that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essays.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. s. [from francplegium, Lat.
of franc, i. e. liber & plège, i. e. fidei & jurat.]

A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace was that every free born man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison; whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus fran-ciplegi, view of frankpledge. Cowell.

FRANKS. n. s. [Lat. Franci.]

1. People of Franconia in Germany; and the ancient Franks.

Part of these Saxons, with Sebastian Man-ster, leaving their habitation, where the Rhine enters into the sea, went up higher, and inhabited about the river of Main, and called themselves Franks. And from these Franks the French or Frenchmen are descended; who seem to have been so called, for having chosen, in some sort, to live in more freedom and liberty than some other of the Germans did.

Vertegart, Reas. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1.

2. An appellation given by the Turks, Arabs, and Greeks, to all the people of the western parts of Europe.

FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phre-netick, phreneticus, Lat. phrenicus, Gr. See FRENETICK.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and tur-bulently mad.

For aill, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent, in some sort, Cybel's frantick riles have made them mad.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Eateeming, in the frantick error of their minds,
the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom,
and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.

Dryden.

She tears her hair, and frantick in her griefs, Calls out on Lucia. Addison, Cato.

3. Simply mad.

The lover frantick.

See Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shaks.

FRANTICKLY. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; distractedly; outrageously.

What wise men do think of them that so frantickly on their ale-benches do prattle, it is up to conjecture. Bole, Leland's New Year's Gift.

Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk.

Shakespeare.

Yet still would they his sacred laws transgress—
Against their Saviour frantickly rebel.

Sandy's Ps. 78.

FRANTICKNESS. n. s. [from frantick.]
Madness; fury of passion; distraction.

Sherwood.

FRATERNAL. adj. [from fraternal, French;
fraternus, Lat.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall rise

Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state
Will arrogate dominion underneath'd

Over his brethren. Milton, P. L.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, these more publick reprobations; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censure of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond.

Placid it to be,

With all the strength and beats of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Addison, Cato.

FRATERNALLY. adv. [from fraternal.]
In a brotherly manner. Colgrave.

FRATERNITY. n. s. [from fraternité, French;
fraternitas, Latin.]

1. The state or quality of a brother.

2. Body of men united; corporation; society; association; brotherhood.

'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the honour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.

3. Men of the same class or character.

With what terms of respect knaves and scots will speak of their own fraternity. South, Serm.

FRATERNIZATION. n. s. [from fraternize.]

A sort of brotherhood. See To FRATERNIZE.

I hope that no French fraternization, which the relations of peace and amity with systematised rigidity would assuredly, sooner or later, draw after them, even if it should overturn our happy constitution itself, could so change the hearts of Englishmen, as to make them delight in representations, and negotiations, which have no other merit than that of degrading and insulting the name of royalty. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To FRATERNIZE. v. n. [Fr. fraterniser.]

This word has been supposed to have been introduced at the commencement of the French democratical revolution; when pretensions of universal brotherhood were made the cloak of universal villainy. But the word, both in French and English, is at least of two hundred years ago; for thus Colgrave renders the French fraterniser, "to fraternize, to concur with, to be near unto, to agree as brothers." In the cant of modern philosophy, the verb has been actively employed.

FRATRICIDE. n. s. [from fratricide, Fr. fratricidium, Lat.]

1. The murder of a brother.

In an hour and a half we came to a small village called Sinis; just by which is an ancient structure on the top of an high hill, supposed to be the tomb of Abel, and to have given the adjacent country in old times the name of Abilene. The fratricide also is said by some to have been committed in this place.

Monsieur, Journ. de Aleppo, p. 134.

2. One who kills a brother.

The infamous fratricide was presently thrown from his usurped greatness.

L. Addison, West. Barbary, p. 16.

FRAUD. n. s. [from fraus, Lat. fraus, Cornish; frauder, French.]

1. Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtlety; stratagem.

Our better part remains

To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not. Milton, P. L.

None need the frauds of sly Ulysses fear.
Dryden, Æn.

If success a lover's toll attends,
Who shall if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.

2. Misfortune; damage.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd who thought
All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deity supreme, us dispossest'd,
He trusted to have seiz'd, and into fraud
Drew many, whom their place knows here no more. Milton, P. L.

To all his angels he propos'd
To draw the proud king Abael into fraud,
That he might fall in Ramoth. Milton, P. R.

FRAUDFUL. adj. [from fraud and full.]
Treacherous; artful; tricky; deceitful; subtle.

The warfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraughtful man.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
He, full of fraughtful arms,
This well-invented tale for truth imports.

Dryden, Æn.
FRA'UDULLY. adv. [from fraudul.] De-ceitfully; artfully; subtly; treacherously; by stratagem.

FRA'UDULENCE. † n. s. [fraudulentia,
FRA'UDULENCY. } Lat.] Deceitfulness; trickishness; proneness to artifice.

We admire the providence of God, in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endowment of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same. Horne.

The malice, wickedness, and fraudulence of those spirits. M. Covelton, of Credulity, p. 25.
FRA'UDULENT. adj. [fraudulent, Fr.
Cotgrave; fraudulentus, Latin.]

1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.

He, with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Mil. P. L.
She mix'd the potion, fraudulent of soul;
The potion manled in the golden bowl.

Pope, Odys.
2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent.

Milton, P. R.
FRA'UDULENTLY. adv. [from fraudulent.]
By fraud; by deceit; by artifice; de-ceitfully.

The prophete Jeremie pronounceth hym accursed, that doeth his mayster's busyennes fraudulently.
Woolton, Chr. Man. (1576), sign. L. 8.
He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudulently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make reparation.

Dr. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
FRAUGHT. † particip. pass. [from fraught, now written reight.] Dr. Johnson. But this participle is from the Teut. verb,
vrachten, "vectare, vehere, et vectura merare, implere navim, Sax. vrachten," Kilian.]

1. Laden; charged.
In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught.

Shaks.
With joy
And tidings fraught, to hell he now return'd.

Milton, P. L.
And now approach'd their fleet from India,
fraught

With all the riches of the rising sun,
And precious sand from southern climates brought.

Dryden.
2. Filled; stored; thronged.
The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature.

Hooker.
By this sad Urr, fraught with anguish woe,
Arriv'd, where they in earth their blood had split.

Spenser, F. Q.
I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare, First Folio.

Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discursing with another.  Bacon.

Hell, their habitation, fraught with fire,
Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.

Milton, P. L.
Abdallah and Belfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them.  Addison.

FRAUGHT. † n. s. [Teut. vracht; Swed.
frakt; Fr. frat, "the freight or fraught of a ship," Cotgrave.] A freight; a cargo.

Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy
fracht!

For "the speak's" tongues. Shaks. Othello.
The bark that all our blessings brought,
Charg'd with thyself and James, a doubly royal
fracht.

Dryden.
TO FRAUGHT. † v. a. [for freight, by corruption, Dr. Johnson. But see FRAUGHT.
Teut. vrachten.] To load; to crowd.

Hence from my sight!
If after this command thou freight the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shaks. Cymb.

Being fraught with sundry base scoffs, and cold amplifications. Bacon, Obs. on a Libel in 1592.

Having now full fraught himself with wealth.
Fuller, Holy State, p. 126.

Which shameful libels were fraught only with odious and scurrilous calumniation.

Sir G. Poul, Life of Alp. Whigfist, p. 52.
FRAUGHTAGE. † n. s. [from fraught.]
Lading; cargo. A bad word.

Our freightage, sir,
I have convey'd abroad. Shaks. Comedy of Err.

On that persuasion am I returned, so to a famous and free port, myself also bound by more than a maritime law, to expose as freely what freightage I conceive to bring of no trifles.

Milton, Tenebræ.
FRAY. n. s. [effrayer, to fright, French.]

1. A battle; a fight.
Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd.

The furious prince Tenebræ from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide.

Freight.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.

Pope.
2. A duel; a combat.
Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long thy fray.

Deans.
The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray.

Pope, Æliad.
3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.
I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays
Like a fine bragging youth. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

TO FRAY. † v. a. [effrayer, Fr.]
1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them
fray.

Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey.

Spenser, F. Q.
So diversely themselves in vain they fray.
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh.

Spenser, F. Q.
Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
These creatures prey only on caracaras, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away. Gov. of the Tongue.

TO FRAY. [Fr.] To rub; to wear.
Six round-about aprons with pockets, and four striped muslin night-rails very little frayed.

Taiter, No. 245.
3. To burnish, as a deer's head by rubbing. Cotgrave.

A deer is said to fray her head, when she rubs it against a tree. Whalley, Notes on St. James.

FRA'YING. \ n. s.* [from fray.] Peel of a deer's horn.

For by his sloes, his entries, and his port,
His fraying, ferments, he doth promise sport.

B. Jonson, Last Shiphord.
FREAK. † n. s. [freck, German, saucy, petulant; pmec, Saxon, fugitive. Dr.
Johnson.—Wachter defines the German
freck by the Latin nimis liber; i. e. too free, deducing it from the Sax. fræh, frec. But may it not be from the Icel.
freak, to quicken motion, to hasten;
Sax. fræman, to dance?]

1. A sudden and causeless change of place.
2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim;
a capricious prank.

O! but I fear the sickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field.

Spenser, F. Q.
When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange.
She is restless and peevish, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation.

Spectator.
To vex me more, he took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

TO FREAK. † v. a. [a word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson, Dr. Johnson says. The word is not Scotch. Nor is our language indebted to Thomson for it. It had been used, nearly a century before his time, by Milton. And Milton, who loved our ancient language, might adopt this verb from the old word frecken, a freckle or spot. See FRECKLE.] To variegate; to chequer.

The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet,
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

There furry nations harbour;
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd;
Or bounteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue.

Thomson.
FRE'AKISH. † adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humoursome.

Folly is freash and humoursome.
Marrow, vol. i. 8. 1.

One grain of true sense and real wisdom, in real worth and use, doth outweigh loads of freash
wit. Marrow, Sermon on Ephes. v. 4.

It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freash of the two; for she was still the same uneasy fop. L'Estrange.

FRE'AKISHLY. adv. [from freash.] Capri-ciously; humoursomely.

FRE'AKISHNESS. † n. s. [from freash.]
Capriciousness; humoursomeness; whimsicalness.

Some of the Cartesianists bid fair towards this freashness. Assent on the Disc. of Truth, (1683), p. 175.

TO FREAM. v. n. [fremer, Latin; fremir,
French.] To grow or grunt as a boar.

Bayley.
FRE'CKLE. n. s. [fleck, a spot, German;
whence fleckle, freckle, Dr. Johnson.—
Our old word is frecken or fraken. Thus in the ancient dictionary of Huloet:
"Frecken, a mole or spot in the body or face." And thus Chaucer: "A few frakes in his face ypreint." Kn. Tale,
Mr. Tyrwhitt says, the word is Saxon;

but he produces no proof. Fraken, I may add, is rendered in our old lexicography "Lentigo, id est, vestigium particularum macularum in facie, scilicet lentule."

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.

Dryden.

2. Any small spot or discolouration.

The cowslip tell her possumers be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fair favours;
In those freckles live their favours.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

The farwell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tinsles; therefore cover such with mate, to prevent freckles.

Evelyn.

FRECKLED, f. [from freckle]. Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots. It is a freckled spot that growth in the skin.

Levit. xiii. 39.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms.

The even mood that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip

Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck droop'd,
Ere' broods in ev'ry maid.

Swift.

FRECKLENESS, n. s. [from freckle]. The state of being freckled; as, "freckle-lessness of the face."

Sherwood.

FRECKLEFACED, f. [from freckle and face].

Having a face full of freckles.

He that's freckle-fac'd.

Boonm. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FRECKLY, f. [from freckle]. Full of freckles.

Sherwood.

FRED, the same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredoles, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Rein-fred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE, f. [from frēa, frēo, Saxon; frī, Dutch; frīja, Gothic. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection.

Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.

How can we think any one free than to have the power to do what he will?

Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r;
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains.

Not fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.

Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like ours or ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church.

Hosier.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discoveries; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.

South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd?

Not what they would? Milton, P. R.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shel. Tam. of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all.

Milton, P. L.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree.

Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When eyes are most free.

Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends.

The critics have been very free in their censures.

I know there are two whose presumptuous thoughts

Those free beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.

Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castello, I have doubts within my heart;

Will you be free and candid to your friend?

Be acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;

To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,

In free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,

Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter.

Hakewill on Providence.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow.

Be us'd to sorrow, and leav'd to woe.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious; with of.

Glo'ous too, a free to citizens

O'conquering your free purses with large fines,

That seek to overthrow religion. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

No statute in his favour says,

How free or frugal I shall pass my days;

I, who at sometimes spend as others spare.

Sage, Horace.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty:

Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works.

Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most I'll mind,

Leaving free things and happy shows behind.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appal the free,

Confound the ignorant.

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

12. Exempt; with of; anciently: more properly from.

These

Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty

Is never free of. Shakespeare, N. H. Tole.

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name.

And free from conscience, is a slave to fame.

Let every, then, those crimes within you see.

From which the happy never must be free.

Dryden.

Their steeds around.

Free from the harness, grace the slow 'ry ground.

Dryden.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is free from the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.

Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body; with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect

Free of his farm, with promise to respect

Their several kinds alike, and equally protect.

Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.

Countenance all legal, allowed, free grammar-schools, by causing, as much as in you lies, the youth of the nation to be bred up there.

South, Sermon v. 48.

15. Accomplished; genteel; charming. [a very ancient application of free to our females; Su. Goth. and Icel. find, handsome; Germ. frey. I have says, that free once denoted, exclusively, a woman of rank. See Frax. Dr. Johnson overpasses the present sense of free.]

Frax yong Venus, fresh and free.

Cauchy, K. Tole.

Now were they liegemen to this lady free, (the fair Britoness.)

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,

Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great.

B. Johnson on Lucy, Countess of Bedford.

16. Ready; eager.

We still use the phrase, "a free horse."

Haunting the forest wide on courser free.

Spenner, F. Q. i. ix. 12.

TO FREE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is

By law and process of great nature thence

Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to

The anger of the king, nor guilty of,

If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Shakespeare, 1st. Tole.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down.

2 Mac. ii. 22.

Canst thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the great'st wand?

Dryden.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill; with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve

them.

Clerendon.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Syllable shall your steps contrain.

And blood of offer'd victims free the way.

Fire was the signal; but hast'ning to his prey,

By force the furious lover free'd his way.

This master key

Free every lock, and leads us to his person.

Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

My again
Give to our taberns meet, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives.
Shakespeare.

Never any slough of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [free and looty.
Dr. Johnson. Our word, it may be added, is, in French, libustier or libustier; sometimes also written libustier. And our old orthography is freedomter. See Sidney State-Papers, vol. 2. p. 78. "The freedomters of Flushing spoyle all the contribution." Lett. in 1597.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freedomters, fitter to spill a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freedomters as sailed under their commission, taken all the seasons. Clarendon.

FREEDOM-OTING. n. s. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsonly in his way; and when he gets abroad in the night on freedoming, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser on Ireland.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [free and born. Sax. freoþm-otear.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

The chief captain answered. With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was freoþm-otear. Acts. xxii. 28.

This is true liberty, where freedom men, Having to advise the publick, may speak free. Milton, Tr. from Euripides.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freedom brethren of the world! Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freedom subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Freemason darest. Dryden, Aen. Dedic.

Shall freedom men, in humble awe,
Selmut to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom drew
The same right to be rul'd by law.
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREEDOM-PER. n. s. [free and chapel.] Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Covel.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [free and cost.] Without expense; free from charges.

We must not touch any man for an exact matter in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freedom, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is 'clock for nothing. South.

To FREEDOM-OTER. v. a. [free and denizen, or denizen.] To make free.

No worldly respects can freedom-denizen a Christian here, and of 'peregrinus' make him 'civil.' Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 302.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. A citizen.

Plato thought it meet, that in every city or commonwealth, as often as any good or harm did concern to any citizen or *freedom*man thereof, it should not be counted that man's good or harm only, but the good or harm of the whole city.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 619.
FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The *freedom*man, and will be profum'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden, Juv.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [Sax. frýðm, freedom.] 1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of dotes; not yet 'tis freedom;
Their names in this or 't'other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden, Pers.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our freedom laws I own
To leave the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shaks.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This price first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom: they themselves ordain'd it all. Milton, P. L.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in his choice, by so much the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. Smith.

5. Unrestrained.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. i.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater obligation of always chasing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

8. Assumed familiarity; a colloquial expression: in which sense the plural is used; as, he will not suffer any *freedom*s to be taken with him.

FREEDOM-OTER. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too *freedom*ed. Shaks. Hamlet.

FREEDOM-OTER. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

A *freedom*ed woman, and a chaste.
Homilies, Of the State of Matrimony.

Sir Roger Aston, an Englishman born, but had his breeding wholly in Scotland, and had served the king many years as his barber; an honest and *freedom*ed man. Dr. Johnson.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 4.
Love must *freedom*ed be, and voluntary;
And not inchant'd, or by fate constrain'd. Devin.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either blockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folkland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Covel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it was made by matter of record. Bacon, Off. of Attorney.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own; a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.  Addison, Freeholder.

My friends here are very few, and find to the freehold from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREEDOM-OTER. n. s. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the few did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Daines.

FREELY. adv. [from free. Sax. freolice.] 1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freely rejoice to that absence wherein he woo honour, than to the embracements of his bed, where he would show most love. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The vilest persons breathing have passed their lives freely and jocosely, without the least misgiving or suspicion about their eternal concerns, who yet at length have met with a full payment of wrath and vengeance in the other world for all their confidence and jollity in this. South Sermon. ix. 36.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains I have bestow'd to breed this present piece, You would drink freely. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Gorths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat caviare with wine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worship'd by the wise;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden, Juv.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell. Milton, P. L.

He leaves us to chase with the liberty of reason-able beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Bacon.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. s. [free and man.]

1. ONE not a slave; not a vassal.
Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgement which keeps us from chasing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison on Italy.

FREEMAN. * See MASON.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FREENESS. n. s. [from free. Sax. frignes.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

Besides this largeness to the will of man And winged freedom, none can think upon His understanding. Mare, Song of the Soul, ll. iii. 9.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.

FREER. n. s. [from free.] One who gives freedom. Sherwood.

FREESCHOOL. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeshool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeshool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like course as Marcellus and Regulus had done; the emperor fell into discourse of the sejunctive and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freepoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.
These freepoken and plainhearted men, that are the eyes of their country.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.
The old freepoken shepherd, or those mercenary fasteners. More against Idolatry. Pref.

FREESTONE. n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building, and dug up in many parts of England; so called from its being of such a constitution, as to be dug up freely in any direction.

Chambers.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand: she has a leathern band, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare, As you like it.
The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat.

Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheism is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependence on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground.

Swift, Arg. against abolishing Christianity.

FREETHINKING. * n. s. [free and think.] Contempt of religion; licentious ignorance.

Are we not grown drunk and giddy with vice, and vanity, and presumption, and freethinking, and extravagance of every kind?

Ep. Berkeley, Sermon. Feb. 18. 1731.

We see France and Italy overrun with the worst kind of deism. There our travelling gentry first picked it up for a rarity. And indeed, at first, without much malice. It was brought home in cargo of new fashions; and worn, for some time, with that levity by the importers, and treated with that contempt by the rest, as suited and was due to the apishness of foreign manners; till a set of sordid blockheads, grown insolent by liberty, and malicious by unsuccessful attempts towards distinction, abused the indulgence of a free government, in reducing those vague impieties into a system. And so it was, that licentious ignorance came to be distinguished with the name of freethinking. Warburton, Sermon, in 1746.

FREETONGUED. * adj. [free and tongue.] Accustomed to speak freely and openly.

Where ministers depend upon voluntary benevolence, if they do but, upon some just reproach, gall the conscience of a guilty hearer; or preach some truth, which disrelates the palate of a prepossessed auditor; how he straight fires out; and not only withholds his own pay, but also withdraws the contributions of others; so as the freetongued preacher must either live by air, or be forced to change his pasture.

Ep. Hall, Coast of Conscience. D. iii. C. 7.

FREEWARRANT. n. s. [free, and warrant.] A privilege of preserving and killing game. See WARREN.

Freewarren is a franchise erected for preservation of beasts and fowls of warren. Blackstone.

FREEWILL. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire; this seems to me the source of all liberty! in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my name, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezek. vi. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. s. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [frigor, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Oppress with his lute made trees

And mountain tops, that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing.

Shakespeare, Ham. VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness frozes.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal, And through the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze, and formerly, frezed; part. frozen or frose.

1. To congeal with cold.

O'er many a frozen, many a bery Alp.

Milton, P. L.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,

Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare, Rich. III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Shakespeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion. I have a falot cold four thrills through my veins, That almost frees up the heat of life.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

That was that unaky-headed Gorgon shield,

What wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,

Wherewith the freez'd her foes for to congeal stone? Milton, Comus.

Death came on amain,

And exercis'd below his iron reign;

Then upward to the seat of life he goes;

Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he frees. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. freight; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [freter, French. Dr. Johnson. Rather the Teut. vrachten. See To FRAUGHT. Teut. fruchen, rudens, a, fraten, onerare. Wachter.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The prices

Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,

Freight with the ministers and instruments

Of cruel war. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cres. Pro.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than those,

Who freight a ship to venture on the sea;

With one fall interposing plank to save

From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden, Jun.

Freighted with iron, from my native land

I set my voyage. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would

Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere

It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and

The freighting souls within her. Shaks. Tempest.

FREIGHT. n. s.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight.

The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden, En.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. s. [freighter, French.] One who freights a vessel.

The ship, the goods, the freighters, being all free.
Sir L. Jenkins's Life and Lett. vol. 2. p. 794.

FREM.* See FRAM.

FREM'D adj. Pronounced frem'd. [Dan. fremmet, German and Sax. frem'd.] Strange; not related; foreign; uncommon. Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words. Inimical, as well as strange. Wilbraham's Cheshire Gloss. and Grose.

FREM'† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. The German fremd, Dutch, vremd, and Sax. þremn, signify an alien, a stranger, — from the preposition þan, or þra, from.] Ray. Chaucer thus uses fremde or fremed for strange. But the contemporary commentator on Spenser considers fren as a contraction of foreign: — "Frenne, a stranger. The word I think was first poetically put, and after and used in common custom of speech for forrenne." Notes on the Shep. Cal. April.] A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from his cradling mind is start,
And woe the wilder's daughter of the Glen;
So now fair Rosalind hath left his smart;
So now his friend is changed for a fren.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRENCH.* n. s.

1. The people of France. [Franci, Lat.] From the Franks the French or Frenchmen are descended, who seem to have been so called for having chosen in some sort to live in more freedom, and liberty, than some other of the Germans did. Vertagum, Hist. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1. I come to the French, a people breathing liberty, by the very derivation of their name. Reverend of the Peace of Germany, p. 110.

2. The language of the French.

The present French is composed of Latin, German, and the old Gaulish. Cauden, Rem. The English of Chaucer has a great mixture of French in it.

Tyrrwhitt on the Lang. and Verif. of Chaucer.

FRENCH.* adj. Belonging to the character or language of the French.

Liveliness and assurance are, in a peculiar manner, the qualifications of the French nation. Adison, Spect. No. 455.

We have few Latin words among the terms of domestic use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Johnson, Pref. to his Dictionary.

FRENCH Chalk. n. s.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as stonies is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Woodward.

FRENCH Grass.* n. s. Saint-foin; so named, as coming originally to this country from France.

FRENCH Horn.* n. s. [French, corne de chasse.] A musical instrument of the wind kind, used in hunting; and in modern times employed, with fine effect, in regular concerts.

As the rood led him by degrees towards the extremity of the moor, they heard, at a distance, the sound of a French-horn; which a little revived

Tugwell's spirits, though it revived at the same time the jealousy he had been in amongst the stag-hunters. Grewes, Spirit. Quir. n. 7.

To FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a cockcomb.

They mistook nothing more in King Edward the Confessor than that he was frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. C Camden, Rem.

Has he familiarly
Dish'd up your yellow starch, or mid your doubtless
Was not exactly frenchified?
Beaumont and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

FRENCHLIKE. adj. [French and like.] Imitating the French fashion.

His hair Frenchlike stares on his fringed head.
Bp. Hall, Sat. lib. 7.

FRENCHETICK. † adj. [frenetique, French; φρεναιτικ; generally therefore written phrenetic; and sometimes frenetic; as, "frenetic persons," Huloet's Dict.] Mad; distracted.

Sometimes he shuts up, as in frenetic or infectious diseases. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Civ. B. 2.

A foreign, frenetic, and unlucky proud king.
Habswell on Providence, p. 594

He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetic malady.

Danist, Civil Wars.

FRENZICAL.* adj. [from frenzy.] Approaching to madness.

The narrowness of her income, the coldness of her lover, the loss of her reputation, all contributed to make her miserable, and to encrease the frenzical disposition of her mind. Orrey on Swift, p. 112.

FRENZY.* n. s. [φρενις; phrenitis, Latin; whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phreny, or frenzy; Fr. frenaisie. Chaucer writes our word frenesic.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed mad.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Adison, Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body indurth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy; this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FREQUENCY.* n. s. [frequentia, old Fr. frequentia, Latin.]

1. Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakspeare, Timon.

I was encouraged with a sufficient frequency of auditors.
Bp. Hall, Spec. of his Life, p. 112.

2. Repetition.

I might here have done with the frequency; but let me add this one consideration more, that often ioculation of warning necessarily implies a danger.

He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton, P. L.

FREQUENCY. n. s. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Astbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou can't 'em be while into the senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, what dost thee?
Br. Jonson, Cautive.

FREQUENT.* adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

The frequenter these times are the better.
Duty of Mon.

As ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden, E. s.

Frequent runners shall besiege your gates.
Pop.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

The Christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practice of it. Duty of Mon.
Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

'Tis Caesar's will to have a frequent senate.
Br. Jonson, Scipio.

The purpose of this frequent senate
Is, first, to give thanks to the gods of Rome.
Manning, Roman Actor.

A thousand demigods on golden seats,
Frequent and full. Milton, P. L.

To FREQUENT. v. a. [frequentio, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to; to haunt.

They in latter day
Finding in it ports for fisher's trade,
Gave more the same frequent, and further to invade. Spenser, F. Q.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto:
Our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them. Hooder.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. Shakspeare, Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented
By the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before dignify'd, visit. Danist.

And that he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable, and less dangerous. Sidney.

FREQUENTATION.* n. s. [Fr. frequentation; Lat. frequentatio] Resort; the act of visiting.

We are separated from others nations, to the end we be not polluted with sin by their frequentation and company.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 100.

These inhabitants were much more civilized, than those of the island country, by the commerce and frequentation of other nations.

Temple, Sacred, Hist. of Eng. p. 7.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, Fr.; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER.* n. s. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Daily frequenters of public prayers.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 60.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequentur, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom: a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift.

FRESCO. n. s. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellichs apries

Love me the fresco of the nights. Prior

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk. Dr. Johnson. — But it is a painting on fresh plaster, or on a wall laid with mortar not yet dry; and, being used for alcoves and other buildings in the open air, obtained from the Italians this name of fresco.

The spaces, that lie between, are painted in fresco, by the same hand that has enriched my ceiling. Taylor, No. 179.

How thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye:
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

3. It has been sometimes used for any cool, refreshing liquor.

FRESH. adj. [perc, Saxon; fresche, old Fr. fraische, mod. Fr. frisch, Teut.]

1. Cool; not rapid with heat.
I'll cut the farthest mend for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrowed baits his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

The fame of a good knight would ever live
Fresh on my memory. Beaumont, and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dross of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, feeding the Deliy,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton, P. L.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Nine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryden, Indian Emp.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in vases. Dehaim.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou man, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay!
Milton, P. L.

Think not, 'cause men flatter ring,
Y' are as fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as the morning star,
That you are so. Carver.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirit's Palinurus pressed;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest,
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place; Dryden, En.

Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

Like a fresh tenant of Newgate, when he has refused the payment of garnish. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.
Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him;
Take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon, Holy War.

Two swains,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentleman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks?
Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation to England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Hursey on Consumption.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison, Spect.

10. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.

11. Fasting; opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.

12. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

13. Tipy. A low expression.

14. Raw; unripe in practice.

How green are you, and fresh in this old world!
Shakespeare, J. K. J.

FRESH. n. s.

1. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not show him
Where the quick freshes are. Shaksp. Tempest.

2. A flood, or overflowing of a river.

This heavy rain will bring down the freshes.
North. Grace.

They have cut new channels, and even whole rivers, with particular drains from one river to another, to carry off the great flux of waters when floods or freshes come down. Cruikshank, Tour through Gr. Brit. Lincolnshire.

TO FRESH. v. a. To refresh. One of our oldest verbs.

He thought of thilka water shees
To drinke, and fresh he wold withall. Chaucer, Rem. R. ver. 1519.

But quickly she it overpast, so soone
As she her face had wypt to fresh her blood. Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 45.

FRESH-BLOWN. adj. [fresh and blown.]

Newly blown.

Beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew. Milton, L'Allegro.

TO FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prolusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson, Spring.

TO FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magic power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope, Odyssey.

FRESHET. n. s. [from fresh.] A stream of fresh water.

Now love the freshet, and then love the sea.

Boozer, Irish. Past. (1615) li. 3.

All fish from sea or shore.

Freshet or parting brook, of shell or fish. Milton, P. R.

FRESHFO'CE. n. s. [low Lat. frica fortia.] In law, a force done within forty days. If a man be disceised of lands or tenements, within any city or borough; or deforced from them after the death of his ancestors to whom he is heir; or after the death of his tenant for life, or in tail; he may, within forty days after his title accrued, have his remedy by an assize, or bill of fresh-force. Comel, and Chambers.

The space of forty days hath had with us divers applications, as in the assize of freshforce in cities and boroughs, &c. Selden, on Drayton's Polyol. §. 17.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly springing up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hobbes.

Their moth shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remembered. Shakespeare, Hen. F.

They are now freshly in difference with him. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?
Shakespeare.

4. Gaily.

FRESHMAN. n. s. [fresh and man.] A novice; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

The parsnip, or freshman in their friendship.
R. Jonson, Diacoreis.

I would be a graduate, sir, no freshmen.
Beaumont, and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

See the dull freshmen, just arriv'd from school,
A comcom ripening from a rustic fool!
The Student, l. 240.

FRESHMANSHIP. n. s. [from freshman.]

The state of a freshman.

Upon my freshmanship. R. Jonson, Far.

Instead of a post, this young fenceer hath set himself up one of the deepest mysteries of our profession, to practise his freshmanship upon.
Holles, Rom. p. 5.

FRESHMENT. n. s. [from fresh.] Refreshment. Not now in use.

To enjoy the freshment of the air and river.
Cartwright's Freshet's Travels, (1611,) p. 19.

FRESHNESS. n. s. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odorous smell best broken or crushed;
but flowery pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their colour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind;
for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the beats of Summer; but they be but penings of the winds, and entering them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air.

Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

Grondville.

6. Freedom from saltness.

FRESHNE'W.* adj. [fresh and new.]
Wholly unacquainted; unpractised.

This fresh-new sea-farers. Shakespeare, Pericles.

FRESHWATER. [a compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as fresh-water men or novices.

The nobility, as fresh-water soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks.

Anstet, Hist. of the Turks.

FRESHWATERED.* adj. [fresh and watered.]
Supplied with fresh water, or perhaps newly watered.

That rocky pile thou seest, that verdant lawn
Fresh-water'd from the mountains.

Alexander, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

FRET.† n. s. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from fretan, to adorn; to come from fretan; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum. Dr. Johnson. — A more probable etymology perhaps, is the Saxon fretan, or the Fr. frotter, to rub, to wear away; whence the figurative application of the word, to vex, to cause any agitation or commotion. We use to rub in the sense of to excite. Wicliffe writes frotting for fretting. B. Jonson also uses freted for rubbed. In the first of the definitions, viz. a strait of the sea, fret, it may likewise be observed, is the Cornish word for it.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones, and oppose its passage. Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, discharged itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Darham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requirith good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, interm'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton, P. L.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Cress, Comed. Secret.

4. Working in protuberances.

The frets of boues, and all equal figures, please;
whereas unequal figures are but deformities.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some making garlands were —
The columbine amongst they sparingly do set
The yellow kingcup, wrought in many a curious fret.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret-works of rocks and groves. Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer beat to tire. Herbert.

The incredulous fess, having yet
Drank but time round, reply'd in sober fret. But, Jun.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Cress, Jun.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

6. In heraldry, a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced, and called the herald's true lover's knot.

To FRET.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold.

Before I ground the object metal on the punch,
I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to vibrate in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton, Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shaks. Anti. & Cleop.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

Like as it were a moth fretting a garment.
Po. (Comm. Fr.) xxxix. 12.

5. To form into raised work.

In a long purple pall, whose skirt with gold
Was fretted all about, she array'd. Spenser, F. Q.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bays sculpturs grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton, P. L.

6. To variegate; to diversify.

Yon grey lines,

That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.
Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

You will gather more advantage by listening to them, than from all the nonsense and frisky
of your own sea. Swift.

They tell me it [the Philosophical Dictionary] is frisky, and blasphemous, and wild. Gray, Lett. to Macon.

FRI'PERY.* adj. Trifling; contemptible.

My master's bo-peep with me.

With his pipping in and out again,

Argued a cause, a frisky cause.

Benson, and Fl. The Chances.

That city, though the capital of a duchy, made no frisky an appearance, that instead of spending some days there, as had been intended, we only dined, and went on to Parma.

Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

FRIS'UR. n. s. [French.] A hair-dresser. See To FRIZZ.

Who now can pedant rules endure?

Go, boy, and bid the best friseur

At six pence be w' me.

My hair in wires exact and nice, &c.

Poems by Genl. of Oxford, 1757, p. 12.

To curl the grove, &c. was surely to derogate from the dignity of the high office and character of his genius, who is degraded to a friseur.

Watson, Notes on Milton.

To FRISK.† v. n. frizzare, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—I should rather pronounce the old Fr. frisque, lively, brisk, jolly, as the parent of our word. V. Cotgrave and Roquefort in V. FRISQUE.

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fish fell frisking in the net. L'Estrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolic and gaiety.

We are as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk 't the sun,

And bleat the one at the other: what we drank 't was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare, Wind. Tale.

About them frisking play'd

All beasts of 't' earth. Milton, P. L.

A wanton heifer frisk'd up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,
Then serve their fury with the rushing mane.

Dryden, Virg.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rods,
And boasts in gambols frisk'd before their houses
go. Dryden.

Off to the mountains airy tops advance,
The frisking youths on the summits danc'd.

Addison.

Those merry blades,
That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Prior.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

Sly hunters thus, in Barocco's stile,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimic animal ensue.

They place before him gloves and shoes;

Which when the brute puts aukward on,
All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK.* adj. [French, frisque.] Lively; jolly; blithe. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Fain would they seem all frisk and frolic still.

Ision, — turned dancer, does nothing but cut capriscos, fetch friskals, and leads levallours with the Laminia. B. Jonson, Masques.

FRISKEN. n. s. [from frisk.] A wanton;
one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what;
All new fashions be pleasant to me:

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop?

Comden.
FRISKET.* n. s. A part of a printing-press; a frame of iron, very thin, cover'd with parchment or paper, cut in the necessary places, that the sheet, which is between the great tympan and dricket, may receive the ink, and that nothing may hurt the margins.

The frisket, thy preventing grace,
Keeps us from many a sullied face.

Poem at the end of Watson's Hist. of Printing.
FRISKFUL.* adj. [from frisk and full.] Full of gaiety.

His sportive lambs,

Let Slut have some pancake for company sake.

Twiss.
2. A fragment; a small piece.

Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of none that makes fritters of English.

Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.
If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ancient errand knights
Won all their ladies hearts in frights;
And cut whole giants into fritters.

To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.

It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleases themselves to dislike.

These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for by the breach of them, little damage can come to the common wealth.

She tan'd the bridled lioness,
And spotted mountain parly, but set on naught.
The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton, Comus.
Those things which now seem frivolous and slight,

Will be of serious consequence to you,
When they have made you once ridiculous.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proof.

I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection.

FRI'VOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivolous.] Triflingly; without weight.

You employ your important moments, meditate, too frivolously, when you consider so often little circumstances of dress and behaviour.

FROLICK. adj. [vrolick, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — The word is originally, perhaps, from the Goth. fra, recreation; whence the German froh, glad, and frollich, full of gaiety; Danish, fro, the same; and the Sax. freo, whence freolice, in a free or unrestrained manner. Frolick is merely fro, i. e. free or gay, with the adverbial termination like or ly. Free and frollick are combined in one of the prose-examples which I add.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We furries, that do run
By the triple Helecte's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frollick. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Whether, as some sages sing,
The frollick wind that breathes the Spring,
Zephyr with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a Maying;
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonaire. Milton, L'Allegro.
Who ripe, and frollick of his full-grown age,
Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood.

The gay, the frollick, and the loud.

Then to be free, and frollick, and flourishing in the highest degree.

FRONT.† n. s. [from frons, Latin; front, Fr.]

1. The face.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

They stand not front to front, but each doth
view

The other's tail, pursu'd, as they pursue.

It carried its author in his front. Creech, Manilius.

South, Sermon. ix. 108.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow.

Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike; as, a hardened front; a fierce front. This is the usual sense.

Whence, and what art thou, creature shape,
That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreant front against my way!

Milton, P. L.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.

His foul estoc

His forward hand, insu'd to wounds, makes way upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.
The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot that thudded upon them from the rampier in front, and from the galleries that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt lost and host but narrow space was left,
A dreadful interval! and front to front
Presented stood, in terrible array. Milton, P. L.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though inwardly partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon, Ess.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the south, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above
He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden, Æn.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison on Italy.

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.

The very head and front of my offending
Hath this extent, no more. Shakspeare, Othello.

To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oppose directly, or face to face; to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane;
we will walk lower; if they scape from your co-couter, then they light on us. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenge with easy grossus? Shakspeare, Coriol.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that they fight on. Bayne, Essay.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrongs about me.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

2. To stand opposed or over against any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a town-house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,

Where others tell steps with me. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

FRONTAL.† n. s. [from frons, Latin; frontal,
French.]

1. Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnotics. Quincy.

We may apply interceptants upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied.

Wicman, Surgery.

The torped, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death, produced no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opinion, and served as frontals in phrenias.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. [In architecture] A little pediment over a small door or window.

3. A bandage worn on the forehead; a frontlet. V. Cotgrave in FRONTAL.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cusped, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point.

Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. s. [from front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all my palos,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!

That men may say, when we the front-box grace!
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from front.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form. Milton, P. L.

FRONTIER.† n. s. [from frontiere, French;
Lat. frons and terra.]

1. The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea,
but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those borders away
him.

I upon my frontiers have keep residences.
That little which is left so to defend. Mit. P. L.

2. Formerly the forts built along the bounds of any territory.

In the frontiers made by the late emperor Charles the fifth, divers of their walls having given way.

A place there lies on Gallia's utmost bounds,
Where rising seas insult the frontier grounds.

FRONTIERED. * adj. [from frontier.]
Guarded on the frontiers.

Now that is no more a border, nor frontiered with enemies. Spenner.

FRONTINIA'CK Wine. * n. s. [from a town of Languedoc in France, so called.] A rich wine.

He [K. James I.] drank very often, which was rather out of a custom than any delight; and his drinks were of that kind for strength, as frontinack, canary, high canary wine, treat wine, and Scottish ale.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, (1630), p. 179.

Thou wouldst eat nothing but kids and fawns, carps and mullets, snipes and quails; and drink
nothing but frontinack.

Brew, London's Precedent for Mercy, (1657).

FRONTISPICUM. n. s. [from frons, Latin, id quod in fronte conspicitur, Lat. frons, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems
The portal shone. Milton, P. L.

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece? Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.

Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS.† adj. [from front.] Not blushing; wanting shame; void of disfidence.

To triumph in a lie, and a lie themselves have forged, is frontless. Fully often goes beyond her bounds; but Impudence knows none.

B. Johnson, Discoveries.

They, frontless men, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war.

Dryden, Iliad.

For vice, though frontless and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace.

Dryden, Iliad and Frontiers.

Strike a blush through frontless battery. Pope.

FRONTLET. n. s. [from frons, Latin; frontum, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late i'th' front.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thee eyes.

Dryden, vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wicman, Surgery.

FRONTROOM. n. s. [from front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Mason.

FRO'FISH.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Peevish; froward.

His enemies — had still the same power, and the same malice, and a froppish kind of insolence, that delighted to deprive him of any thing that pleased him, and manifestly pleased itself in vexing him. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 368.

FRORE† part. adj. [bevroren, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He had overlooked Philips; and his contemporary, T. Warton, has somewhere used it.

The parching air
Barren frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton, P. L.

When the aged year
Inclines, end Boreas' spirit blusters frore, Beware the inclement heavens. Philips, Cyder, B. 9.

FRORE† part. adj. [bevroren, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

My heartblood is well nigh frore I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my bowel.

Spenker, Ship. Cal.

FRO'RY.* adj. [from frore.]

1. Frozen.
Her up betwixt his rugged hands be rear'd,
And with his frovy lips full softly kiss'd.

Spenker, F. Q. iii. vii. 35.

2. Covered with a froth resembling hoar frost.

She used with tender hand
The foaming steed with frovy bit to steer.
Faifus, Tass. ii. 40.

FROST† n. s. [frost, Saxon; and Dr. Johnson might have added that this word is in most of the northern languages; as frost, Germ. Dan. Sw. and Icel. vrost, Dutch; probably from the Lat. frigus, and that from the Gr. φρως, cold, ice, the v being changed into f.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

When the first seizes upon wine, only the more warish parts are congealed; there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Pope, Winter.

FRO'SITTEN. adj. [from frost and bitten.]
Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostitten. Mortimer.
FRO'STEN. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold.
Gay.

FRO'STILY. adv. [from frosty.]
1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courting, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.

B. Jonson.

FRO'STINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FRO'ST'NAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are straight only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Greene, Cornal. Sacra.

FRO'STWORK† n. s. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and those the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork those,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.

Blackmore.

No sooner did the warm aspect of good fortune shine out again, but all those exalted ideas of virtue and honour, raised, like a beautiful kind of frost-work, in the cold season of adversity, dissolved and disappeared. Warburton on Prodigies, p. 17.

FRO'STRY† adj. [Sax. frostrig.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Titus Andronicus.
The air, if very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorches in frosty weather. Bacon.

A guest, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive.

L'Extranger.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Hoary; grey-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty land,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

FROTH† n. s. [fræ, Danish and Scotch-tish, Dr. Johnson. — The Su. fra is also spume. These northern words correspond with the Gr. ἀφρός, foam, σπέρη, spray.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then buried he about,
And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his frothy foamy steed. Spenker, F. Q.

When wind exspirith from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end.

Milton, P. R.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of water. Glanville.
The scatter'd ocean flies;

Black mounds, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mow'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that it has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surface of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the lower froth about his mouth and his bridle: and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist.

Bentley, Scrm.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig, and lamb, being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without froth.

Tass.

To FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churms it through his teeth. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Greene.

To FROTH.* v. a. To make to froth; as to froth beer, i. e. to make it rise on the top.

Fill me a thousand pots, and froth 'em froth 'em.
Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

FRO'THILY† adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam, with spume. Sherrwood.
2. In an empty, trifling manner.

FRO'THINESS.* n. s. [from frothy.] Emptitiness; triflingness.

The vanity of his conversation, and the profane and frothiness of his discourse.

South, Sermon, vii. 364.

It would, doubtless, be as much more delightful as beneficial, if, when we meet, we were accustomed, instead of censures and reflections, news and impertinence, or frothiness and lightness, to discourse of some worthy and noble subject, becoming the genius and hope of a christian.
Lucas, Sermon, on Prov. xiii. 20.

FRO'THY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The top of trees is of different natures; some watery and clear, as vines, bunches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bashing should make them frothy.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Extr.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Walton.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a ditterper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skeiner.

To FROUNCE† v. a. [Fr. froncer, or fronser, 'to plait, to fold, to wrinkle,' Cotgrave; fronsen, Teut.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some fronce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenser, F. Q.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overstraining frounced head.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil suited Morn appear;
Not tick'd and frost-bitten as she was wont,
With the Attock by to burst. Milton, El. Pens.

FRONCELESS.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkle, a plait; and thence contemptuously, a fringe or curl, or some ornament of dress. Bullock notices the first meaning. See also FRONCELESS.

What! shall I leave my state to pins and poking-sticks,
To fardingales and fronces? De Witt, and F. Mena. Thomas.

FRONCELESS.* adj. [from fronce and less.] without wrinkle. Obsolete.
Her forehead fronces all plain. Chaucer, Rom. R. 860.

FRONZY.* adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.

2. Dim; cloudy.
When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her cheeks disgrace;
A fronzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRON.* n. s. [from fron, German; frau, old French; wroue, Dutch; all signifying a woman; fru, Su. Goth. a woman of rank; Lat. virg, a woman, a manly woman.] A woman; generally applied to Dutch or German women. In the north of England, a fron, according to Grose, is an idle, dirty woman.

They are now
Buxom as Bacchus' froes, revelling, dancing.
Brown, and P. W. at ten. Weapons.
A Dutch fron's colour hath no grace,
Seen in a Roman lady's face. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 269.

Your sleeves, like the German frons, are all checks to the belly. Junius, Six Signatures, p. 38.
FRON.* adj. Brittle. Used in Berkshire.
It is fron in the north. Ray, and Grose.
That (timber) which grows in so brittle is to be fron (as they term it) and brittle. Evelyn, i. iii. § 5.

FRONWARD.* adj. [From fron, Sax. fron,
i. e. from ward, in opposition to to ward.
Thus the word was originally used for averse." So fronward is it from sadness." Chaucer, Rom. R. 1940, i. e.
so far from it.] Peevish; ungovernable;
angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

The fronward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chillest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not fron, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they fronward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.
Time moveth so round, that a fronward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon, Essays.

'Tis with fronward men, and fronward factions too, as 'tis with fronward children; they'll be sooner quited by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of fronward children in cradles. Temple.

FRONWARDLY.* adv. [from fronward.] Peev-ishly; perversely.

I find me sad was wrath, and he went fronwardly
in the way of his heart. Is. lvi. 17.

FRONWARDNESS.* n. s. [from fronward.] Peev-ishness; perverseness.

How many fronwardness of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and fronwardness of age.
Alldam, Cato.

FRONWER.* n. s. [I know not the etymology.]
A cleaving tool.

A fronwer of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry bath. Tusser.

TO FRONN.* v. n. [frogner, old Fr. to rinker. Skinner. To this etymology
Dr. Johnson accedes. But I do not find this French verb in the old glossaries. Moreover, fron has been better traced to the Goth. ufryn, grim or stern, by Serenius; which corresponds with the Greek σφοδρ, bearing the sense of a severe or haughty look.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frons: I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They choose their magistrate
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Thus ever frons'd. Shakespeare, Coriol.

How now, daughter, what makes that frown on you? You are too much of late i'd' fron.
— Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her fronning. Shaks. E. Lear.
Heroes in animated marble fron. Pope.

The word,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Ward high, and frons'd upon the stream below. Pope.

TO FRONN.* v. a. To drive back with a look of haughtiness or displeasure.
Venidius fix'd his eyes upon my passage,
Severely, as he meant to fron me back. Dryden, All for Love.

FRONN.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that fron of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

In his half-closed eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile threat stand;
His front yet threatens and his fron command. Prior.

FRONWINGLY.* adv. [from fron.] Sternly;
with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he fronwingly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FRONWY.* adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it fronwy.

But if they with thy gates should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the fronwy fede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRONZEN.* part. pass. of fröze.
1. Congelated with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
E'en such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden, Æn.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth;
T' invade the frozen waggons of the North. Dryden, Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet stirre. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine French knight, fronzen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not ever fronzen, coy,
One born of love will soon destroy,
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat of appetite.

Even here, where fronzen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

FRONZENNESS.* n. s. [from fronzen.] State of being frozen.

They soon return to that fronzenness which is hardly dissolved. By. Camden, Itinerary, 1653, p. 486.

F.R.S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Shine in the dignity of F.R.S. Pope.

TO FRU.* v. a. To furnish. Barret.
This corruption also sometimes occurs in our old authors. See TO FURNISH.

FRUCT.* adj. [Lat. fructus.] An heraldical term; given to all trees bearing fruit.

FRUCTIFEROUS.* adj. [fructifer, Lat.]
Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION.* n. s. [from fructify.]
The act of causing or of bearing fruit;
fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown, Fals. Err.

TO FRUCTIFY.* v. a. [fructifker, Fr.]
To make fruitful; to fertilise.

Neither doth the earth bring forth budde, or leaves, or other fruits, unless it receives moisture of the rains; nor the rains doth fructify without earth. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. Ee. i. b.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Hemel, Fac. Fur.

Where'er 't he looks, behold some sudden fire
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Graville.

TO FRUCTIFY.* v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to render it fructify;
maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all devilish and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooder.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTUATION.* n. s. [from fructuous.]
Product; fruit.

Knowing—with what superabundant population the first fructuation of an advancing society is loaded. Parnell on Antip. (1782), p. 60.

FRUCTUOUS.* adj. [fructuosus, Fr. from fructify.] This is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it. "Be fructuous," Parson's Prol. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plentiful sheaves of corn
Of interlaid colour; and both inbudd

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erbound!

Philos.

FRU'CTURE. * n. s. [Fr. fructure.] The fructure, use, fruition, possession, or enjoyment of. Colgrave.

FRU'GAL. adj. [frugalit., Lat. frugal., Fr.
'thrin': sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admin-
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such dispositions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use. Milton, P. L.
And wing'd purveyors his sharper bent fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and mallow bread. Harte.

If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Fragal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a driving day. Dryden, Virg.

FRUGALITY. n. s. [frugalit., Fr. frugalit., Lat.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small savings, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Walker.
In this frugality of your praises some things I cannot omit. Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lives:
it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

FRUGALLY. † adv. [from frugal.] Par-simoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

He would have us live soberly, that is to say, honestly, shamefacedly, chastely, temperately, and frugally.

Wotton, Christ. Manual. (1574.) sig. L. iii. b.
Mean time young Parsonhood his marriage press'd.

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bride with his own. Dryd.

FRUGGIN.* n. s. [Fr. fourgon.] An oven-fork, termed in Lincolnshire a fruggin.
Colgrave. The pole, with which the ashes in the oven are stirred. North.

Grose, and Praise of Yorkshire Ale.

FRUGGEROUS. † adj. [frugifer., Lat.]
Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

Every fruggerous herb which is upon the face of the earth. Moss, Conj. Cabb. (1655.) p. 8.

FRUIT. n. s. [fructus, Lat. fruit, old Fr.
fruit, modern; fruyth, Welsh.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did err
And. Druids.

See how the rising fruits the garden crown,
Inlike the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ephes. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; by young of any animal.

Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body.
Deut. xxviii. 4.
Shall the women eat their fruit, and the children of a span long? Lament. ii. 20.

Can't thou their reek'nings keep? the time
compute,

When their swell'n bellies shall enlarge the fruit.
Sandy.
5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of greeting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of studying. Stacy.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.
Prov.

7. The desert after the meat.

Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO FRUIT.* v. n. To produce fruit.

As it is three years before they fruit, I might as well at my age plant oaks, and hope to have the advantage of their timber. Ld. Chesterfield.

FRUITAGE. n. s. [fruitage, Fr.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines Yield nectar. Milton, P. L.

Greedily they pluck'd
The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that luxurious lake where Sodom fad'm'd.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garlanding of their work? Mercer.

FRUITBEARER. n. s. [fruit and bear.]
That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the mosses. Mortimer, Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.]
Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUITERER. n. s. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Samson Stockfish, a fruiter, behind Gray's-inn. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plums and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY. n. s. [fruiterie, Fr.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oh, notwithstanding all they care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ill, an oriental blast Disastrous flies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If he continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The Earth,
Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor o'er'ring may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth. Milton, P. L.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the nest. Shakespeare.

3. Prolific; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, bear; draw children, hear a father
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:

Into her womb convey sterility, Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Male he created thee, but thy cooperator
Female for races, then blow'st mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

Milton, P. L.
I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damselfruitful.

Gay, Trif. to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's public posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of peace, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal sight
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off;
if you will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakespeare.

Fruitfully abound. Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS. n. s. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant shroon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh, Hist.

2. The quality of being prolific, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden, Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues so, I cannot but justly hate him. St. James, Discoveries.

FRUITGROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.]
Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruitgroves? Pope, Ody.

FRUITION.* n. s. [old Fr. fruition, from fruior, Lat.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him
most deservingly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by length of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

God riches add renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a blessing receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Saunders, Paraph. of Ps.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;
Till by fruition, sorely destroy'd,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists.

nists; if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh, Hist.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are; But let me here for ay in peace remain, Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spenser, F. Q.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither; Fruitless to me, though fruit be here 't excess. Milton, P. L.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless. Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown, And put a barren sceptre in my gripe; No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiously fruitlessly acquireth, and confidence blindly determineth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Walking they talk'd and fruitlessly divin'd What friend the priestess by those words design'd. Dryden.

FRUITLESSNESS. n. s. [from fruitless.]

Barrenness; unfruitfulness; vanity.

Christ whips out fruitlessness in the innocent 6g-tree; like as the manner was among the Persians, when their great men had offended, to take their garments and beat them. Hales, Rom. p. 96.

Certainly the fruitlessness and inseparableness of their vice [swearing] considered, almost no sinners have more to answer for. Boyle against Cant. Swearing, p. 120.

FRUMENTY. n. s. [from frumentum, Fr. Cotgrave; from frumentum, corn, Latin.]

Food made of wheat boiled in milk. Pronounced, and sometimes written, frumety.

Frumenty makes the principal entertainment of all our country wakes. Our country people call it frumty. It is an agreeable composition of boiled wheat, milk, spice, and sugar. Dr. Gueric, Mat. for Hist. of Cheshire, p. 10.

To FRUMP. v. a. [this is an old word, occurring both in Sherwood's and Cotgrave's dictionaries, and rendered by the French moquer, i. e. "to mock, flout, frump, scoff, deride; to gull; to frustrate; to disappoint;" so that one is led almost to believe it a corruption of the Fr. tromper, to deceive, to delude.

Dr. Johnson barely notices the word, without etymology, or example, from Skinner and Ainsworth; but Skinner, as well as Minshew, offers as the etymology the Teut. krum, crooked; or the verb krumplein, i. e. krimpsneusen, to turn up the nose in contempt.] To mock; to insult.

I am abus'd and frump'd, sir. Bosom, and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

We ever gentleman frump'd off with a fool? Bosom, and Fl. The Chances.

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us but as love draws; He swallows on, and never chaws; By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die; He is the tyrant pike, and we the fy. Drom.

For with the sounds and seas, each creek and bay, With fy innumerable swarm, and shoals Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales Glide under the green wave in sculls that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton, P. L.

The angler had the fry to draw up a very light fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge Leviathans, 'till averted their prey;
And give no chase, but stand on the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding lincolns sung. Spenner, F. Q.

Then before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding lincolns sung. Spenner, F. Q.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;

FRYTH.* See FRITH.

To FUD, v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fob. See Fob.

A hundred marks is a long way for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fud'd off and fud'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Why Doll, why Doll, I say, my letter fud'd
And no access without I mend my manners?

Bonum. and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

FUD, n. s. A plump chubby boy, according to Ainsworth; applied also to a woman, as Mr. Malone observes.

Written also fubs; which word is thought to have been applied by King Charles II. to the Duchess of Portsmouth, who is supposed to have been in her person rather full and plump.

See Nichols, Literary Anecd. vol. ix. p. 359.

That same foule deformed fude.
Rob and a Great Coat, (1614.) Ep. 44.

FUBBY.* adj. [from fub.] Plump; chubby.

The sculptors and painters apply this epithet fubs to children, and say for instance of the boys of Fiammingo, that they are fubby.

Nichols, Lit. Anecd. vol. ix. p. 359.

FUCATE.* adj. [fucatus, Lat. from fucus; Heb. puch, lead.] Painted; whence, disguised by false show.

Shall falsify the language of my heart. Sandys, Job. p. 52.

3. [In botany.] The name of a genus of submarine plants. The Latin plural.

The various authors who have written upon the fuci have very unaccountably divided the varieties, included in the denomination "veiculosus," into numerous species.

Obs. on the Brit. Fuci by Dr. Goodenough, &c. Lin. Tr. lib. 19.

FUDDER of Lead.* Among the miners, a load of lead. See FOTHER.

To FUDDELE, v. a. [of unknown etymology. It has been derived indeed from food and ale, as though ale had been the chief food of him who is fuddled. See Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words in V. Fuddle. But I cannot think this the origin of the word.] To make drunk.

Fian. He thinks there's no man
Can give him drink enough. Host.

That's not enough, I'll fuddle him,
Or lie 'till he suds. Bonum. and Fl. The Cupidon.

They are still seeking change, restless, fickle, fugitive; they may not abide to stay in one place long. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 185.

The most malicious surmise was constructed by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician. Watson.

7. Perishable; as, a fugitive piece; i. e.

a little composition printed on a sheet, or less; a small pamphlet. Literary men of modern times have introduced this meaning, no doubt, from the circumstances usually attending such pieces of being soon forgotten, or soon lost; and have accordingly given occasion to collections of some fugitive performances, which ought not so to perish.

FUGITIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are likely to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.

Back to thy punishment, False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings, Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton, P. L.

He met her full, but full of warfulness. Sidney.

You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Followers who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of incontinence; they taint business, through want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

That must be our cure,
To be no more; and cure; and for who would lose,
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity?

Milton, P. L.
Gay religious full of pomp and gold. Milton.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain.

Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply,
and compassed about with infirmities which he cannot remove.

Tillotson.
From your bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,

A speedy word to encounter you, my lord!
This is the news at full. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being satiated.

When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.
[Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.

Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FULL.† adv.

1. Without abatement or diminution.

He full
Resplendent all his Father manifest

In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; which many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden, Dram. Fanny.

A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden, Auring. Pref.

Since you may
Suspect my courage if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryden, Virg.

2. With the whole effect.

'Tis the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden, Drafthouse.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

3. Exactly.

Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood.

Addison on Italy.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play.
Addison, Ovid.

4. Directly.

He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull.
Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse.
Dryden, Æn.

5. It is placed before adverbs, adjectives, and participles, to intend or strengthen their signification. So the Sax. pul-opt, full oft; pul-rap, full slow; pul-pipe, full wide; pul-neh, full nigh, pul-bojen, full born.]

Tell me why on your shield, so goodly scord,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead.
Spartan, F. Q.

My time is not yet full come. St. John, vii. 8.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Full well ye reject the commandment.
St. Mar. vii. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad.
Milton, P. L.

You full little think that you shall be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Mora, Div. Dial.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight.
Dryden.

Full well the god his sister's eyes knew,
And wast her aims and what her arts purpurs.
Dryden.

There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.
Swift.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arriving at its highest state, or utmost degree.

FULL-ACCORNED.* adj. [full and accorned.]
Fed full with acorns.
Like a full-acorn'd boar. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FULL-BLOOMED.* adj. [full and bloomed.]
Having perfect bloom.
A month, whose full-bloom'd lips
At too dear a rate are roses. Crashaw, Poems, p. 25.

FULL-BLOWN.* adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud.
Denham, Sophy.

My full-blown youth already fades space;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space!
Dryden, Juv.

2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail.
Dryden, Pers.

FULL-BOTTOMED.* adj. [full and bottom.]
Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having paraded a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottom'd wig for a sum of money. Guardian.

FULL-BUT.* adv. [full and butt.] At the same point, from opposite directions, and not without violence.

He and the babbler, or talker, I told ye of, met full-but; and after a little staring one another in the face, upon the encounter, the talker opened.

L'Estrange, Tr. of Quixote, p. 211.
FULL-CHARGED.* adj. [full and charged.]
Charged to the utmost.

I stood 'till the level
Of a full-charg'd confederacy. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

The chub-faced fop
Shines sleek with full-cramm'd fat of happiness.

Marton, Antonio's Revenge.
FULL-DRESSED.* adj. [full and dressed.]
Dressed in form; ceremoniously decorated.

To convey to us any just idea of a full-dressed
Jewish fine lady,
Pittington, Rem. on the Trench. of the Bible, p. 92.

FULL-DRIVE.* adj. [full and drive.]
Completed; a very old expression, which we still use, though in a very different way, meaning driving as fast as possible. Yet Chaucer's phrase "to drive a bargain," i. e. to bring it to a conclusion, is now used in colloquial language.

This bargain is full-drive, for we ben knit;
Ye shal be paid trewely by my troth.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale.

FULL-EARED.* adj. [full and eared.]
Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-eared corn, or torrents raging course.
Dewhew.

FULL-EYED.* adj. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.

FULL-FED.* adj. [full and fed.] Sated; fat;
saginated.
It was a veridige plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-boiled air.
Pope, Dunciad.

FULL-FRAUGHT.* adj. [full and fraught.]
Fully stored.
Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the full-fraught man, the best eadu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare, F. Hen. F.

Thither, full-fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies.
Milton, P. L.

FULL-GORGED.* adj. [full and gorge.]
Too much fed; a term of hawking.
Your hawk is full-gorged; and not cropped.

The Book of Hawking, s. d.
Till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Shakespeare, Tem. of the Shrew.

FULL-GROWN.* adj. [full and grown.]
Completely grown.
A wench full-grown. Shakespeare, Pericles.

Full-grown to man. Milton, P. L.
FULL-HEARTED.* adj. [full and heart.]
Full of confidence; elated.
The enemy full-hearted,
Lolling the tongue with slaughtering.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
FULL-HOT.* adj. [full and hot.] Heated to the utmost.
Anger is like
A full-hot horse; who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle sires him. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FULL-LADEN.* adj. [full and laden.] Laden till there can be no more added.
It was such that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand.

Tillotson.

FULL-MANNED.* adj. [full and manned];
Sax. pul-mannob, viris instructus. Lye.
Completely furnished with men.

Our overplus of shipping will be burnt;
And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head of Actium.

Beat the approaching Caesar. Shaks. Ant. and Cl.
FULL-MOUTHED.* adj. [full and mouthed.]
Having a strong voice or sound.
A full-mouth'd diapason swallows all.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 86.
Had Boreas blown
His full-mouth'd blast, and cast thy houses down?

Quarles, Jewish, sign. K. i. b.
FULL-ORBED.* adj. [full and orb'd.]
1. Having the orb complete.
As Lucifer excels the meanest star;
Or as the full-orb'd Phœbe, Lucifer. Addis. Ovid.

The moon
Full-orb'd, and breaking through the scatter'd
clouds,
Shows her broad visage in the crimson'd east.
Thomson, Autumn.

2. Like a full moon.
Twelve thousand crescents all shall swell
To full-orb'd pride, and fading die.
Mason, Caractacus.

FULL-SPREAD.* adj. [full and spread.]
Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinging go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too.

Dryden, Astron. Reden.
FULL-STOMACHED.* adj. [full and stomach.] Having the stomach crammed.
The slaughter'd bodies of their men,
Which the full-stomach'd sea had cast upon their sands.
Townsend, Ash. Tragedy.

FULL-STUFFED.* adj. [full and stuff'd.]
Filled to the utmost extent.
Their burly sacks and full-stuff'd barns.
Dryden, Polyd. S. 14.

FULL-SUMMED.* adj. [full and summed.]
Complete in all its parts.
The cedar stretched forth his branches, and the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons East and West; but now the eagle is become half-naked.
Hovel, Foe. For.

FULL-WINGED.* adj. [full and winged.]
1. Having large or strong wings.
And often to our comfort shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold,
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. Ready for flight; eager.
May he find it,
When his affections are full-wing'd, and ready
To stoop upon the quarry.
Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

His speech doth fail. Trag. of K. John, 1611.

To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many fireworks as he stars in heav'n,
With distinct breaths and consigned kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose ball. Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the boards, in such an agony

They told 'em false for fear. Dryden, Spem. Friar.

FUMBLER. n. s. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY.† adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

Many good scholars speak but fumblingly.
B. Jonn, Discoveries.

FUME. n. s. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But straight, like Turk, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bodies of their fire,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Beind purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort.

In winter, when the least without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessel, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink discompose and supply the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

Plung'd in cloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden, Pers.

Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain
surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove;
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and scandal so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon, Wor with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, Fr. fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By their great intercessor; same in sight
Before the Father's throne. Milton, P. L.

Pron thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories dash'd about her head. Dryden, Æn.

Strait hover round the fair her airy hand;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fum'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Thy tie the libertine in a field of fœnts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Silence lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always hot in extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. B. Jonn, Celliæ.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd
face
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beams;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson, Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival freed and gone,
He swelt with wrath; he makes outrageous roars;
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,

Shakespeare.

From thence he furrow'd many a churlish sea.

P. Fletcher, Pae. Ed. 13.

The billows fall, while Neptune lays his mace,

On the rough sea, and smooths its furrow'd face.

Dryden.

3. To make by cutting.

There go the ships that furrow out their way;

Yes, there of whales enormous sights we see.

Watson.

FURRY.* adj. [from fur.]

1. Covered with fur; dressed in fur.

From Volga's banks th' imperious Czar

Leads forth his furry troops to war.

Fulton to Lord George.

2. Consisting of fur.

Stretch out thy lazy limbs, awake, awake,

And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryd.

Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,

Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryd.

FURTHER.* adj. [from forth, not from far as is commonly imagined; forth,

further, furtherest, corrupted from forth,

forthest, poðest, Saxon. Further is used by Sir Thomas More. See FORTH and

FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to this word.

1. At a greater distance.

2. Beyond this.

What further need have we of witnesses.

St. Mat. xxi. 65.

Satan had journey'd on pensive and slow;

But further way found none, so thick intwin'd,

As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth

Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd

All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.

Milton, P. L.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining

For nee forbidden tree a multitude

Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton, P. L.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substantive in the phrase no further for nothing further; and in what further for something further.

Let this appose

Thy doubt, since human reach no further knows.

Milton, P. L.

I may meet

Some wandering spirit of heaven by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd, from him, to draw

What further would be learn'd. Milton, P. L.

FURTHER.* adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.

And the angel of the Lord went forth, and stood in a narrow place.

Numb. xxii. 2.

To FURTHER.* v. a. [from the adverb; poðþan, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance; to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure the best.

Tuam.

Could their fond superstition have furthered so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power.

Hobbes.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked;

Further not his wicked device.

Ps. cxi. 8.

This binds me then to further my design.

Pyd.

FURTHERANCE.* n. s. [from further.]

Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business.

Snyder.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practice of all churches afford.

Hobbes.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs,

he seeketh furtherance of that hath no manner of power.

Hobbes.

Cannot my body, no blood sacrifice,

Interest you to your wanted furtherance?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it.

Tillotson.

FURTHERER.* n. s. [from further.] Promoter; advancer.

That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servant to his prince and country.

Archam.

FURTHERMORE.* adj. [further and more.]

Moreover; besides.

The Lord said furthermore to him, put now this hand into thy bosom. Exod. iv. 6.

Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation, that he believe rightly the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Athen. Creed.

This ring I do accept most thankfully,

And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,

I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house.

Shakespeare.

FURTHER.* adj. [superlative of forth.

See FAR and FURTHER.] At the greatest distance.

The further a prudent man should proceed in general is to laugh at some of his follies.

Seneca.

FURTIVE.* adj. [furtive, Fr. furtivus, Lat.]

Stolen; gotten by theft.

A furtive simulation, and a lastingly kind of adoption. Ry. Tugler, Artif. Handson, p. 96.

Or do thou, as your schemes, I think, have shown,

Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,

All servants to that source of light, the sun? Psalm.

FURUSCLE.* n. s. [faruscule, Fr. faruscule, Lat.]

A ble; an angry pustule.

A furuscle is in its beginning round, hard,

and inflamed; and as it increases, it rises up from an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day.

Wicman, Surgery.

FURY.* n. s. [Fr. furie, madness, Cotgrave; furore, Lat.]

1. Madness.

It is a tale

Told by an idiot; full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his.
He hath given me to know the nature of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.
Taking up the lute, he wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice, as to so beloved an occasion, second her wit.
A sylb that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury new'd the work.
Greater than human kind the seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul.

4. From furia, Latin. One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.
The sight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul.
It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every imagination is pleas'd when he sees the angry goddess sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

FURYLIKE* adj. [fury and like.] Raving, raging like one of the Furies.
Come and possess my happy breast,
Not furylike in flames and fire,
In rapture, rage, and nonsense dress.

FURZE, n. s. [frax, Saxon; genista spinosa, Latin.] Gorse; goss.
The whole plant is very thorny; the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds.
Both timber and farzin, the turf and the cole.

For fewel, there growth great store of furze,
of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown Farin.
We may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furze.
FURZY, adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.
Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake.

FUSCATION, n. s. [fuscus, Latin.] The act of darkening or obscuring.
FUSCOUS* adj. [Lat. fuscus.] Brown;
of a dim or dark colour.
[The] feathers of the wing of a dark or fuscus colour.
To FUSE, v. a. [fundo, fusum, Lat.] To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify by heat.

To FUSE, v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.
FUSÉE, n. s. [fuséum, French.]
1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the steel wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fuze, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist.

2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.] A small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.

FUSE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds.

FUSEE, Track of a buck.
FUSIBLE* adj. [Fr. fusible. This is one of our oldest words: "Metal fusible."
Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones.

FUSIBILITY, n. s. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metalline nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight,
fusibility, and malleableness.

FUSIL, adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.] Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scraps that occur in most of the larger Gothic buildings of England are artificial: and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble.

2. Running by the force of heat.
The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools; then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'n in metal.
O'er sand and ashes, and the stulborn flint,
Unswerving, turn into a fusil sea.

FUSIL* n. s.
1. A firelock; a small neat musquet. [Fr. fusil, formerly a fire-steel for a tinder-box. Cotgrave.]
2. [In heraldry; from fuséau or fusée, a spindle.] Something like a spindle.
Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle; in the ancient cast of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules.

FUSILIER, n. s. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FUSION, n. s. [fusio, Latin; fusum, French.]
1. The act of melting.
2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fuel except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.

FUSOME* adj. Handsome; neat; notable; tidy. A northern word, of which I know not the origin. But the word is given by Grose and Brackett, and in the West moreland Glossary.

FUSS,† n. s. [A low cant word, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, a regularly descended northern word; Sax. fup, prompt, eager; Su. Gothi, and Cimbr. fus, the same; hence the Sax. fýran, to hasten, and the Su. Gothi, fýga, the same.] A tumult; a bustle.

End it leads you station;
Come to me with application;
Nor with senates keep a fuss;
I submit, and answer thus.

FU'SSLE.* See FUZZLE.

FU'SOCK.* n. s. [of unknown derivation.]
A large gross woman. A northern word.
Grose, and the Craven dialect. But the Lancashire dialect calls "a fusock a term of derision, generally, for fat and idle persons."

FUST,† n. s.
1. The trunk or body of a column. [fuste,
Fr. literally, a cask.]

The bases of a number of columns remain in their original position, and their broken fustes lie scattered around.

Dramond's Travels, Lett. xi. (1748.)
2. A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel. [Fr. fusté, taking of the cask.]

To FUST,* v. n. [from the noun. See also To FOIST.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

So he, that made us with such large discourse
Looking before and after, gave us out
That capability of godlike reason
To fust in us unus'd.

FU'STED* adj. [Fr. fusté.] Mouldy; stink-
ing.

His blownen ware
Of fusted hops, now lost for lack of sale.

FUSTIAN,† n. s. [Fr. fustaine. From the low Lat. fustianum, according to Menage, formed from fustis, on account of the tree on which the cotton grows;
from fustat, Arabic, according to Buehart, which means the city of Memphis, where cotton is produced in abundance.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.
Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings?

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustians.
'Tis fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's ode! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they contain.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, without the least relation to each other.
Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,
Or rise to fustian, or descend to prove.

FU'STIAN, adj. [from the noun.]
1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Unill the fustian shall be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvæ, would have thought Statius made in his fastium description of the statue on the brazen horse.
Dryden, Duferney.
FUT'ASTIANIST.* n. s. [from fastus] One who writes bombast.

Preferring the gay rankness of Apulius, Arnobius, or any modern fastuist, before the native Latinisms of Cicero. Milt. Apol. for Socrates.
FUT'SICK.† n. s. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dyeing of cloth. Dict.

Next to galls old fastick increases the weight about 14 in 12. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 305.
To FUT'STIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Lat.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTIGATION.* n. s. [from fustigare. Fr. fustigation, Cotgrave.] An ancient custom of punishing with a cudgel; the act of beating with a stick; also, a penance enjoined by the Roman inquisition.

They punished such as swore falsely by their prince with fustigation.

Alph. Senech. Mod. Feb. 1657, § 7.
Fasting and fustigation may do something.

FUSTIL'ARIAN. n. s. [from fustus.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian; I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
FUSTILUG, or FUSTILUGS.* n. s. [from fustus.] This choice expression has some advantage over fustilarian in being placed in our old dictionaries, as well as used by a very sensible writer! Sherwood and Cotgrave both give it; and the latter defines it, under the word cooke, "a woman grown fat by ease and laziness." In the Exmouth dialect, fustilug is "a big-boned person." A gross, fat, unwieldy person.

You may daily see such fustilugs walking in the streets, like so many turms, each moving upon two pottle-pots. Junius, Sin Strigmated, (1639) p. 39.

FUSTINESS.† n. s. [from fustus.] Mouldiness; stink. Sherwood.

FUSTY.† adj. [from fustus.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains; he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shaks. Troil. and Cres.

The fusty plebeians hate house hours.

Shakespeare, Coriol.
The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakespeare.
FUTILE.† adj. [utile, French; utilis, Latin.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacious.
One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that keep it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.
The word may have some allusion to the vessel called futile, used in the sacrifice of Vesta, of that narrow bottom that it could not stand, but was forced to be held up. Thus say, a man is futile; and, by alluding to a vessel, you call him a leaking, vain, dissolute fellow; a cracked vessel; he still runs water. Rationale on Texts of Script. (1701), p. 234.

The sons of earth, the vulgar crew,
Anxious for futile gains, beneath me stray,
And seek with erring step contentment's obvious way. Shenstone, Ode after Sickness, (1749).

FUT'LITY. n. s. [utilis, French; from talk.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humor. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.

Bentley.
FUT'ILIOUS.* adj. [Lat. utilis.] Worthless; trifling. Not now in use.

I received your answer to that futitious pamphlet.

Howell, Lett. ii. 48.
God implants no instincts in his creatures that are futitious and vain.

Granville, Sermon. p. 287.
FUT'OCKS. n. s. [corrupted from foot hooks, Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE.† adj. [futurus, Latin; fatur, French. This word had formerly the Latin accent on the last syllable, of which Milton affords perhaps the latest example, P. L. x. 840.] That which will be hereafter; to come; as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the most High! good will To future men, and in their dwellings peace.

Milton, P. L.
He sows the teeth at Pallas's command
And flings the future people from his hand.

Addison, Ovid.
Do and have make the present time; did, had, the past; shall, will, the future.

Lowth, Instrud. Eng. Grammar.
FUTURE.† n. s. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

The letters have transported me beyond This ignorant present time; and I feel now The future in the instant. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.
FUTURELY.† adv. from future.] In time to come.

This presence of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

It more imports me Than all the actions that I have foregone,
Or futurely can hope.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.
FUTURIT'Y.† n. s. [old Fr. futuration.]

The state of being to be; the condition of being to come to pass hereafter.

The time expressed denotes the futuration at the latter day. Peerson on the Creed, Art. ii.

It is imaginable, that the great means of the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futuration, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing, or no? South, Sermon. p. 285.

FUTURIT'Y. n. s. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This, great Amphipharus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity.

Pope, Statius.

3. The state of being to be; futuration.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonic ideas. Granville, Scripps.

To FUZZ.† v. n. [without etymology, Dr. Johnson says; but it may be referred perhaps to the same original as fizz is. See To FIZZ.] To fly out in small particles.

To FUZZ.† v. a. To make drunk. See To FUZZLE. A low word.

The University troop dined with the Earl of Abingdon, and came home well fuzzed.

A. Wood's Life, by himself, p. 343.

FUZZBALL. n. s. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

To FUZZLE.* v. a. [Gr. φύδα, to swell out.] To make drunk. Sherwood.

Having liberally taken his liquor, my fine scholar was so fuzzed, that he was no sooner laid in bed, but he fell fast asleep.

Hutton, Annot. of Met. p. 604.

FUZZY.* adj. [Teut. roose turmen, fuzzy or fozy turves, Dr. Jamieson.] Light and spongy. A northern word. Craven dialect, and Brockett. By the latter written also fozy.

FY.† interj. [This term of abhorrence is found in many languages, and is of great age in our own. Chaucer uses it; Wicliffe, the similar expression, figh, Gr. φαί; Lat. phy; old Fr. fy; Ital. and modern Fr. fi; Span. fai; Welsh, ffei; Flem. foei. Our own word is often written fie. The expression may be traced to the verb signifying hate or disgust; Sax. fian; Germ. fien; M. Goth. fijan; old Goth. fa.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now away.

Spenser.
Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him!

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how dost thou'st

Expectance calls thee now another way.

Milton, Fac. Ecce.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Unhaid me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite.

My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, be cried, we must be past all these galeities. Tulser.

G.

G A B

G† Has two sounds, one from the G. r, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, i, r; as, gale, go, gull; with the exception, however, of gaol and its derivatives, before the a in which the g is soft. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Where g is doubled, the sound before e is usually hard, as dagger, ragged, &c. but not in sugged; and in many words the single g before e has the hard sound, as in geese, get, anger, finger, longer, target, tiger, &c. The same may be said of g before i, whether doubled or not, in numerous instances; as, giddy, giff, gilt, gird, dig, digger, rigging, &c. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived; thus, for benign, malin, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before h; as night. The Saxons h, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gale is by rusticks still pronounced yale.

G.* In music, one of the clefs; that of the treble or alt.

To GAB.* v. n. [a very ancient word in our own language, and found in many others, with much the same meaning; gaber, old French, to laugh at, from gab, mockery; begabbe, Goth. gabba, Icel. the same from gab, a mock; gabban, Sax. to trifle, to joke, to talk a mere jargon; gabbar, Ital. to mock; ghab, Pers. a foolish or bitter expression. The Europ. word is to be traced, perhaps, to the Celt. gab, a beak; Irish, gab, a beak or mouth; whence gab for the mouth; and hence gab.]

1. To talk idly; to prate.

I am no labbe, [blab.]

Ne though I say it, I 'm not late to gabbe.

Chaucer, Nuns-Pr. Tale.

2. To lie; to impose upon. "Gabbing, i. e. lying." Bullokar, and Cockoram.

I deny that thilke thing be good, that anyeth hym, that hath it. Gabbe I of this? Two wile tale maie. Chaucer, Boeth. li. 5.

I gabbe not; so have I joye and blis!

Chaucer, Nuns-Pr. Tale.

GAS* n. s. [from the verb.] Cant; loquacity; imposing language; as "he has the gift of the gab." A colloquial expression.

VOL. II.

G A B

GA'BARDINE.* See GABERDINE.
To GA'BBLE.* v. n. [gabbare, Ital. gabberen, Dutch; gaffa, Icel. to babble. See also To GAS.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Slew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roars,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but
To gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Shakespeare, Tit. Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard such labourers of Babel. Hudibras.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble.

Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclesiast. xxxv. 25.
The lesser devils urse with ghastly rore,
And throng forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream, and shore.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep house.
Gad not abroad at every cry and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each pleasure for the fortune that doth fall.
Is wantonness in contemplation.
Herbert.
Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes round. Milton, Lycidas.
A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their slings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.

Dryden.
She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home;
And drives her gadding round the world to roam.

There's an ox lost, and this cometh ruin a gadding after wild fowl.
L'Estrange.
No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GAIN. adj. [an old word, but not wholly out of use, as Dr. Johnson has described it.] Applied to things, convenient;
to persons, active, expert; to a way, near,
short; Ray, who says that in his time,
the word was used in many parts of England. In Yorkshire it is now used for near. So the Craven Dialect, 1694, where the learned compiler refers to the Su. Goth. gen, utilis, gagen, Icel. Grooe defines it as a Norfolk word, convenient, cheap: "That field his gain for me: I bought that horse pretty gain." Mr.
Brockett gives the word as a present Northumbrian expression, generally attached to other words to signify a degree of comparison; as, gain quiet—pretty quiet; gain near—conveniently near or at hand.

Whole Duty of Man, ch. 6. § 14.

GA'INLESSNESS, n. s. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of work: miners buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged: no more is the insatiable miser.

Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY† adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

She said her child, as gainly as she could, in some fresh leaves and grass.

Mary, Conf. Cobb, p. 133.

TO GA'INSAV, v. a. [gain and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Sometimes which gain say another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject.

Hooker.

To facilitate then; thou didst not much ginsay; Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.

Milton, P. L.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet

That any of those bolder rices wanted
Less impudence to ginsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

GA'INSAYER, n. s. [from ginsaying.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands.

Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people.

Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainers.

Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainers, but failed of their purpose.

Edi.

GA'INSAING, n. s. [from ginsaying.] Opposition.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam, and perished in the ginsaying of Core. St. Jude, ver. 11.

'GAINST, prep. [for against.] See A-GAINST.

Tremble, ye nations, who, secure before, Laugh'd at those arms, that against ourselves we bore.

Dryden.

TO GA'INSTAND† v. a. [gainst and stand.]

To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

A proper word, but not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Sidney. But, it may be added, this was evidently an established word, as it is found in the dictionaries of Huloet and Barret. Wicliffe also had long before employed it, in the form of aghestonde, i. e. aginst and stand.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverend duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires.

In Solome was none found that did gainstandle that furious and beasty multitude, which did compass about and besiege the house of Lot.

Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1586.) fol. 80. b.

TO GA'INSTRIVE, v. a. [gainst and strive.] To withstand; to oppose.

The Fates gainstree us not.

Grinvald, in Songes & Son. pr. by Tallet, (1557.)

TO GA'INSTRIVE, v. n. To make resistance.

On the spoils of women he doth live,
Whose bodies chase, whenever in his power,
He may then catch, unable to ginsistree.

He with his shameful lust doth first drive,
And afterwards themselves doth cruelly devoure.

Spenner, F. Q. iv. 17. 12.

GA'IRISH† adj. So Dr. Johnson chooses to write the word garish, i. e. showy, splendid, &c. as well as its descendant garishness, gairishness. But neither Ascham, nor Shakespeare, nor Taylor, nor Milton, nor South, whom he cites, prefer this method of writing it. Other authors also, whom I shall cite, read garish. See therefore, GARISH, GARISHLY, and GARISHNESS.

GAIT, n. s. [gat, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.

—Icel. gata, a way, a road, from gaa, to go. In the north of England, gate, or gait, is common for a path, passage, or road. Gate is the old way of writing this word.

1. A way; as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door.

Shaks.

With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy takes his gait;

And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace with sweet peace.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

2. March; walk; progress.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all their vain alluredments did forsake.

Spenner, F. Q.

Thou art so lean and meagre water late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.

Spenner, Idib. Tale.

This palpable gross play hath well beguill'd
The brave gilt of night.

Shaks. Mids. N. Dream.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes, I know her by her gait.

Shakspeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.

Clarendon.

A third, who by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.

Milton, P. L.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unweildy, enormous in their gait.

Milton, P. L.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.

Milton, P. L.

GA'ITED, v. a. [from gait.] Having a particular gait, or method of walking.

You must send the ass upon the horse, for he is slow-gaited.

Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

TO GA'ITER, v. a. [from gaiters.] To dress with gaiters.

The cavalry must be saddled, the artillery-horses harnessed, and the infantry gaitered.

Proceed on the Trust of L. A. G. Sackville, 1760, p. 11.

GA'TERS, n. s. pl. [Fr. guêtres.] A kind of spatterdashes. Both the French and English word may be considered as modern.

G.A.L. n. s. [Spanish, finery; Ital. mirth.] A word which has been introduced into our language in modern times; as, a gala-day; that is, any day of show and festivity.

GALA'GE† n. s. [old Fr. galage.] A shepherd's clog; a wooden shoe. Gala'ge, galosh, or galosh, is now sometimes heard, instead of this old word. See GALOCHE.

My heartblood is well nigh frane, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel.

Spenner, Shp. Col.

GA'LANG, n. s. [galange, French.] A medicinal root. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness; its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acid and pungent taste.

Hill.

GA'LAKY† n. s. [γαλαξίας, Gr. galaxie. Fr. Chaucer uses this word.]

1. The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy.

Milton, P. L.

A brown, for which heaven would disdain
The galaxy, and stars be tan'd.

Cicero.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;

Men doubt, because they stand so thick 't' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.

Cicero.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy.

Bentley.

2. Any splendid assemblage of persons or things.

There are stars of several magnitudes; some goodly and great ones, that move in orbs of their own; others small and scarce visible in the galaxy of the church; but all are stars, and no star is without some light.

Hp. Holl, Rem. p. 45.

Often has my mind hung with foodless and admiration over the crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery, diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor.

Dr. Parr, Tracts by Warburton, &c. p. 151.

GALBANUM.† n. s. [Sax. galbanum; Gr. χαλβάνη, from the Heb. chalbanah.] A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil, as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant.

Hill, Materia Medica.
I yielded into a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Eclat. xiv. 15.

GALE.† n. s. [gahling, hasty, sudden, Germ. Dr. Johnson.—Icel. gala, a cold air; haf-gala, a gale or blast from the sea. Serenius.—Eras. gal, a blast of wind. It may perhaps be allied to the Su. Goth. and Icel. gala, to sing, or rather to bawl; to emit a kind of howl. This application of noise to the wind we still use; as, the wind sings, or howls.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua bare from old Verona?
Shakespeare.

Winds
Of gentilest gale Arabian odours fan'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.
Milton, P. L.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

TO GALE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. In naval language, when two ships are near one another at sea, and there being but little wind blowing, one feels more of it than another, they say, the ship gales away from the other. Chambers.
2. To sing. [Sax. galan, literally to sing.] Obsolete, except as far as it concerns nightingale.

In Chaucer's Court of Love, the nightingale is said to cure and gale; hence its name, nightgale, or nightingale. Tyrwhitt on Chaucer.

GALE.† n. s. A plant, which grows upon bogs in many parts of England.

Gale from the bog shall yield Arabian halm,
And the grey willow were a golden plant.
Crooke, Birth of Flattery.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.] Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conical than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALE'NICAL.† adj. [from Galen, the GALE'NIC.] ancient physician. Fr. Galenique.] Denoting the manner of considering and treating diseases according to the principles of Galen.

Galenick is more frequently used as contradicting distinguished from chymical. See GALENISM.

He has been a packhorse in the practical and old Galenical way of physick.

Lift of A. Wood, p. 579.

GALENISM.† n. s. [Fr. Galenisme.]

The doctrine of Galen.
Paracelsus, and after him Van Helmont, altered the whole body of medicine; exploded Galenism, and the whole Peripatetic chymical; and rendered medicine almost wholly chymical. Chambers.

GA'LENIST.† n. s. A physician that, in his way of practice, follows the method of Galen. Bullaker.

Let men dispute whether thou breathest or oo;
Only to this be no Galenist: to make Courts' not ambitions wholesome, do not take
A dream of country's dulness; do not add
Correctives, but, as chymiques, purge the bad.
Donne, Poems, p. 147.

GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GAL'LOT. See GALLIOT.

GALL. n. s. [xena, Sax. galle, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice, remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you nursing min-nisters! Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is gall's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.
This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies, 'It's as bitter as gall;' whereas there's nothing guai-able sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey.

Bovianus has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakspeare, Cymb.
Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!
Shakspeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden, Juc.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left
A perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though before he had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatallest wound: as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.
Gen. of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg; the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries; but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls: for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venoseous liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.

Ray on the Creation.
The Aleppo gall, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Darwin.

TO GALL. v. a. [galler, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
His yoke is easy, when by us embraced;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.

Darwin.
A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting, spoke Tyrant, I well deserve thy galling chains.

Pope, Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being galled with my expense,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.
If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses.

Ray on the Creation.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hobbes.

What they seemed contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we epy that it *gall*eth them. Hobbes.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shaks.

All studies here I solemnly defy.
Save how to gall and pinch this Boilingbrooke. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience unites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and household windows gallied them.

Light dwellings from afar they throw,
Faster'd with leathern thongs, to golt the foe.

In our wars against the French of old, used to golt them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.

To GALL, v. n. To fret.
I have seen you glecting and golling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

GALLANT, adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

The galant garishness, and the beautiful setting forth of it, [the city.]

Robinson. Tr. of More's Utopia, (1551), ii. 2. A pair of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall galant ships pass thereby.

The gay, the wise, the galant, and the grave, Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have.

In galant trim the gilded vessel goes.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner galant enough.

But face thee well, thou art a galant youth. Shak.
A galant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight.

3. Fine; noble; specious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith; But hollow men, like horses but at hand, Make galant shew and promise of their mettle.

4. Courtlly with respect to ladies.

He discoursed how galant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In galant thought to plume their painted wings.

GALLANT, n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation,
— What is't for?
— The reformation of our travell'd galante,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor.

The galants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vassius.

The galants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchons brandish'd at the grisly sight.

Galants, look to't, you say there are no sprights; But I'll come dance about your beds at nights.

2. A brave, high-spirited, magnanimous man. Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning.

He shall recount his worthies, [in the margin, galants],

The mighty [in the margin, galants] are spoiled.

Those that entered France were resisted by Marshal and thirty thousand French galants.

3. A whoremaster, who carresses women to debauch them.

One, more to pieces with age, shews himself a young galant.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her galant.

4. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

To GALLANT, v. a. [from the adjective.]

To pay attention to the ladies; "to court a woman in the way of a galant."

At their first coming to town, I was in a manner obliged to galant them to the play.

GALLANTLY, adv. [from galant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

The market, being in center of the town, is galantly and regularly built.

The captain was galantly mounted and armed.

The brave imposture galantly to dress.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so galantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman.

GALLANTNESS, n. s. [from galant.] Elegance; completeness in respect of some acquired qualification.

From the Italian he will borrow his reversed news, not his jealousy and humour of revenge; from the French his horsemanship, and galantness that way, with his confidence, and nothing else.

GALLANTRY, n. s. [gallanterie, Fr.]

1. Splendour of appearance; stow; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all The English youth flock to their admiral.

The greatest gallantry of ladies is to have them [pearls] dangling at their ears by half dozens.

Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

This gallantry and greatness of soul, that constant garb of justice.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature.

Had we any spark of true gallantry and bravery of mind in us, we should despise all other kinds of life but this.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Diophobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day.

Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd, Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.

That which we call gallantry to women, seems to be the heroic virtue of private person; and there never breathed one man, who did not, in that part of his days wherein he was recommending himself to his mistress, do something beyond his ordinary course of life.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.

GALLEASS, n. s. [galeace, French.]

A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley.

It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns.

My father hath no less
Than three great argosies, besides two galassies,
And twelve tight galleys.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galassies.

GALLÉON, n. s. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spaniards.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galassies and galassies seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.

GALLERY, n. s. [gallerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room. Dr. Johnson. Skinner deduces it from allerie, aller, i. e. to walk: Serenius, from the Su. Goth. gallar, cancelli, i. e. balusters, or rails to compass in.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant alleys, that, one lowering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid.

Have we pass'd through, not without much content.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries there be three cupolas.

A private gallery 'twixt 'twixt apartments led, Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other: for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving away, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throngs the gallery extends, And all the thunder of the pit ascends.

GALLETTIE, n. s. I suppose this word has the same import with galipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galleite; that is to have the colour milky like a chalcedony, being a stuff between a porcelaine and a glass.

GALLEY, n. s. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλιότης, the sword-fish; and others from galicon, expressing in Syriack men exposed to the sea. From galley come galassae, galcon, galiot. Dr. Johnson.—The old French language has galiole or galée for this word. The barbarous Greek γαλιόλια or galés, is also a galley, which Meursius derives from the Ital. galea. The Goth. galeis is the same. It is most probable that the Greek γαλῆς, or γαλῆς, a kind of fish, whence the γαλιῆς, or sword-fish, already mentioned, occasioned, from some resemblance to it, the transfer of the name to this kind of vessel.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load,
Of ships, hulks, galleys, barks, and brigantines.

Forfas.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of galleys, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Forfas.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Levis in an open boat, or kind of galley.

Forfas.

On oozy ground his galleys moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous persons, were he led to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courthips every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galleys for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.

South.

GALLIEV, galé. * n. s. [from galley, and lev, a light vessel. See FOIST.] Or it may be a corruption of the Span. gala, (joined to foist), signifying finery, show, pomp; gala, Ital. mirib, cheer.] A barge of state; and by our old authors applied to the Lord mayor of London's barge.

He built, of cedar, barges or galievs, their sterns being set with pearl and precious stone.

Hobbes on Providence, p. 409.

No plays, nor galievs, nor strange ambassadors to run and wonder at.

Brown, and Fl. Wt without Money.

He has performed such a matter, wench, that if I live next year I'll have him captain of the galievs, or I'll want my will.

Brown, and Fl. Wt of the Burn, Pent.

Out of my doors, you see of noise and tumult, begot on all May day, or when the galievs is about to Westminster!]

B. Jonon, Epicure.

GALLEY-SLAVE, *n. s. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleys.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

By. Brevintail.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.

Decay of Pity.

The surges gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their car.

Gorth.

GALLIARD.* *adj. [Fr. gaillard; which under the substantive galliard, (for he notices not the adjective, which, however, is the more ancient word), Dr. Johnson says, is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay. The Spanish and Italian have the same adjective, viz. gagliardo, and gallardo, meaning brisk, frolic, &c. Whence, no doubt, the name of the dance, gagliarda, and gallarda, the latter of which has been defined "especie de danza y tañido de la escuela española, así llamada por ser muy ayrosa." Dicc. de la Leng. Castell. Acad. Espan. The Icelandic, gaela, to allure, to entice, may perhaps be thought the original of galliard. Certain it is, that the Scotch use galliard for wanton, which Dr. Jamieson deduces from the Sax. gal, lascivious, not without referring also to the northern verb.] Brisk; gay; lively; nimble.

Chaucer, Cite's Tale.

What a thing to laugh at, to see a judge or jurymen at the law in a short coat guarded and pounced after the fashion!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 91.

GALLIARD.* *n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, sprightly dancer. [Span. gallarda; Ital. gagliarda. It is said to have consisted of five particular steps; and Sir John Davies, who calls it "a swift and wandering dance," as well as "a gallant dance betraying a spirit and virtue masculine," bestows no less than fourteen lines in a description of this once favourite performance. Orchest. 1599. The cinque passi in galliarda form no less than three distinct dances in the Ballarino of F. C. da Sermoneta, Venet. 1581.] It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:

You cannot reveal into dukesdom there.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.

Bacon.

The triple and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard-time and measure-time are in the melody of one dance.

Bacon.

GALLIARDISE. *n. s. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company.

Brown, Rel. Med.

GALLIARDNESS.* *n. s. [from galliard.]

Gaiety; cheerfulness.

His rest failed him, his countenance changed, his spiritual pleasure and galliardness abated.

Geyton, on Don Quix. p. 306.

GALLICAN.* *adj. [Lat. Gallicus;

GALLICK.* *adj. [old French, Gallique.]

Seditious documents—they have always impugned, for the defence and preservation of the Gallian regalities and liberties.

By. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 263.

There was a time when the Gallian church understood her own liberty, and boldly asserted it.

By. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

She came

Rob'd in the Gallick room's extravagant twine.

Shakespeare, 22. avil.

GALLICISM. *n. s. [gallicisme, French; from Gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before; with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech.

Felton, on the Classics.

GALLIGANSKINS.* *n. s. pl. [caliger Galligallionum.] Large open house. Not used but in ludicrous language. Dr. Johnson says. The word, however, is in our old lexicography, without any ludicrous application. It is in Sherwood's Dict. 1632, and is explained by Cotgrave, under puerguesnes, viz. "great Gascon or Spanish house."

My gallicisms, that have long withstood

The winter's fury, and encroaching frost,
By time subdu'd, will not time subdue.

An horrid chaos disclose.

I have sent my Coventry-blue waistcoat to the dyers, and bespeak me a new-one pair of gallicisms to be made of beggar's velvet.

Philips.

GALLIMATIA.* *n. s. [Fr. galimatias, "gibberish, fustian language, pedlars' French" Cotgrave.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFERY.* *n. s. [galimafrée, Fr.]

1. A hotch-potch, or hosh of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.

Hammer.

Another dish hath in it a loin of lamb, or kid, with a hard egg; another contains a galimaufrey of apples, nuts, eggs, almonds, &c. dressed with wine.

Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617), p. 229.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley. They have made our English tongue a galimaufrey, or hodge-podge of all other speeches.

Epist. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

They have a dance, which the wench says is a galimaufrey of gambols, because they are not in't.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere galimaufrey of his work.

Dryden, DuFrenoy.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.

—Why, sir, my wife is not young.

—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

He loves thy galimaufrey, friend.

Shakespeare.

GALLINACEOUS.* *adj. [Lat. gallinaceus.]

Denoting birds of the pheasant kind.

Spallanzani has remarked a circumstantial resemblance between the stomachs of gallinaceus fowls and the structure of corn mills.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 15.

GALLIOT.* *n. s. [galiotte, French.] A little galley, or sort of brigantine, built very slight, and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three pat-terocoes. It can both sail and row; and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Dict.

Barbarous departing out of Hellespontus with eighty gallees, and certain galleys, shaped his course towards Italy. Kneller.

GALLIPOT. n. s. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, fiery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallypots, that had on the outside eyes, owls, and satyrs: but within, precious drugs.

Here phials in nice discipline are set; Three galleys are rang'd in alphabet. Garrh.
Alexandrian thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallypot to any man. Spectator.

Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride, And o'er his gallypots in triumph ride. Featon.
GALLIVAT. n. s. [from galley.] A sort of small vessel used on the Malabar coast; a row-boat in India.
GALL-LESS. adj. [gall and less.] Without gall or bitterness.

Saltless and gall less be thy curse!
Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 59.
Ah! mild and gall-less dove,
Which dost the pure and candid dwellers love.
Conley, on the Dwellers of King Ch. II.

A dove, a meek and gall-less creature. Whole Duty of Man, ch. 17. § 19.
GALLON. n. s. [gala, low Latin, Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the old French, gallon. V. Lacombe. And that perhaps may be, by transposition, from the Lat. lagenæ. V. Du Cange in GALO. The Welsh galwyn is the same.] A liquid measure of four quarts.
Heat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopp'd. Wueman, Surgery.

GALLON. n. s. [galon, French; perhaps from the Span. gala, fiery.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

Oh! for a wife,
To make him gallon-lace;
I'll have a coach-whip. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.
For some years last past the use of gold and silver gallon upon hats has been almost universal. Taylor, No. 370.

To GALLOW. v. n. [gallop, French. Derived (by all the etymologists, after Budeus, from gala, gala, but perhaps it comes from gast, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed, Dr. Johnson. — From the Su. Goth. leopa, to run, and the M. Goth. prefix. ga, Serenius.].

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by?
Shakespeare, Macbeth.
His steeds will be restrain'd.

But gallow lively down the western hill. Donne.
In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallow'd from his jealous queen.
Dryden, Virg.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threaten'd a drowning life, we gallowed toward them to part them. Silney.

They can easy
An armed knight towards them gallow fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Spenser, F. Q.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallow all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.
The golden sun
Gallows the sodden in his glis'ring coach. Tit. Andronicus.

Whom doth time gallow whilst?
— With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare, As you like it.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOW. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GALLOW. n. s. [from gallop.]
1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

3. A light carriage for a small piece of ordnance.

GALLOPIN. n. s. [old Fr. gallopin, "an under cook or scullion in monasteries." Cotgrave.] A servant for the kitchen. Obsolete.

Dyer for the kytchen and *gallopin*s. Archæolog. xv. 7.

To GALLOW. v. a. [gallop, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright. In the west of England it is pronounced galley. Grose and Jennings.

The watchful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

GALLOWAY. n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

Spare yourself, lest you beguile the good galloway. Milton, Anim. Re. Preface.

If any member shall purchase a horse for his own riding above fourteen hands and an half in height, that horse shall forthwith be sold, a Scotch galloway bought in its stead for him, and the overplus of the money shall treat the club. Guardian, No. 91.

GALLOWGLASS. n. s. An ancient Irish foot-soldier. Some think that it was a soldier who served on horseback.

It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen they [the Irish] call gallowglases: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for galloway signifies an English servant or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatus; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corselet, before the corselet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

The gallowglase useth a kind of poleax for his weapon. These men are griseous of countenance, tall of stature, big of limbe, lusty of body, well and strongly timbered.

Stembarth, Description of Ireland, ch. 8.
A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglases and stout kernes
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

GALLOW. n. s. [It is used by some in GALLOW'S; the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Galgā, Goth. galga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from galbas, farca, Latin; others from גלגל high; others from galla, Welsh, potent; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from galxan, the gallows, being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a haugman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Silney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallows and gallowes. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

I prophesied, if a gallows were on land, This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare, Tempest.
He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Heywood.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.
Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy. — Ay, and a shrew'd unhappy gallows too. Shakespeare.

GALLOWFREE. adj. [gallows and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowfree by his consent,
And nothing suffer, since he nothing means. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. s. [gallows and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more de-fame,
On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Spenser, F. Q.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,
Drops into Styx, and turns a Soland goose. Cleveland.

GALLY. adj. [from gall.] Of gall; bitter as gall.

He abhorreth all gally and bitter drinkers of sin. Asp. Cronney, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 246.

GALLY-WORM. n. s. An insect, often found in our gardens, with a long body, composed of many rings, and furnished with a great number of feet; which, when touched, has the power of rolling itself up into a ball.

GALO'SHIE. n. s. [French.] A wooden shoe or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet or tye of leather, and worn by the poor cold in winter. Cotgrave. The use of this shoe passed from the Gauls to the Romans, whence Gallica calones. Roquefort. The word is in our old lexicography for a kind of shoe, and is used by Chaucer. It afterwards became galasho, or galosh, and is now pronounced and sometimes written galash. Galashes are now understood to be shoes, without buckles or straps, made to wear over other shoes in wet weather.

Ne were worthy to unboole his galashes.

Chaucer, Syn. Tale.

To all this must be added the vast skill that is required in tending a visit, with approval and modest accuracy; that it be done punctually — that the galashes be left in their true and proper place — that the footboy be expert in observing his tutored distance! Richard, Observ. Conn.

Clergy, p. 158.

GALORE. See GOLORE.

GAL'LOME. adj. [from gall.] Angry; malignant.

Such accusations — any vulgar man who understands the language, at the first sight, may cry out upon, and condemn both of gallosh bitterness and of wilful fraud and falsehood.

By. Merton, Discharge, &c. (1683), p. 210.

GALVA'NICK. adj. Denoting the power of Galvanism. See GALVANISM.

All the Galvanic combinations, analogous to the new apparatus of Mr. Volta, which have been heretofore described by experimentalists, consist (as far as any knowledge extends) of series, containing at least two metallic substances, or one metal and charcoal, and a stratum of fluids; and it has been generally supposed, that their agencies are, in some measure, connected with the different powers of the metals to conduct electricity; but I have found, that an accumulation of Galvanic influence, exactly similar to the accumulation in the common pile, may be produced by the arrangement of single metallic plates or arcs, with different strata of fluids.

Davy, Phil. Transact. 1801, p. II. art. 22.

GALVANISM. n. s. [so called from Galvani, celebrated for the experiments which he made in this branch of philosophy.] Although galvanism and electricity may be considered as the same principles, still, according to the present state of our knowledge, they may be thus distinguished. Galvanism is the portion of electricity, which forms a component part of the conducting body, in the act of undergoing a change in its capacity, from a greater to a lesser state; while electricity is the result of a temporary change in non-conducting bodies, inasmuch that their capacities become, by attrition, momentarily increased.

Wilkinson, Elem. of Galvanism, (1804.), p. 302.

To GAL'VANIZE. v. a. [from galvanism.] To affect by the power of galvanism.

I have tried galvanism in two cases of palsy, both hemiplegia, one a young lady, aged 30, the other a gentleman, aged 25; and, though neither of them were cured, they both received benefit, particularly the gentleman. After being galvanized for twenty minutes, they felt a glowing warmth the remainder of the day. The apparatus I used was a pile of twenty-four pair of plates, of five inches diameter.

Carpue on Electr. and Galvanism, (1805), p. 106.

GALVANO'METER. n. s. A measure for ascertaining the power of Galvanic operations.

VOL. II.

GAMA'SHES. n. s. pl. Short spatterdashes worn by ploughmen. North. So Grose defines the word. In the Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697, gamashes "are coarse cloth stockings that button upon other stockings to keep one warm."

He wore a little brown capote, girt very near to his body, with a white towel; also a pair of breeches and gamashes of the same coloured cloth, and on his head a clay-coloured cap; his gamashes were laced up half the leg.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 1.

GAMBA'DOR. n. s. pl. [gamba, Ital. a leg.] Spatterdashes; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

It has been my custom any time these sixteen years, as all the parish can testify, to ride in gambadoes.

Reasons for Mr. Bays changing his Religion, (1688.), Pref.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

To GAM'BLE. v. n. To play extravagantly for money. A word of contempt. See GAMBLER.

She held out against all the obligations of fashion, and allurements of example; she had an inbred abhorrence of gambling. Locke-on, No. 51.

GAM'BLER. n. s. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAM'BOGE. n. s.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia.

To GAM'BOL. v. n. [Fr. gambiller, Dr. Johnson from Skinner. — Cotgrave renders gambiller, merely, "to wag the legs in sitting, as children use to do;" but gambader, "to turn heels over head, to make many gambols." Our own word was formerly gambald. "To fetch gambaldes, Fr. gambader, Lat. crura in sublime jactare. Gambalding horses, being full of prauings or skippings." Hulcot. Barret also gives gambald for gambol in his dictionary. One "that can gambald or dance feat." Barkly's Egloges, 1570. Egl. 2. The origin is evidently the Ital. gamba, the leg.]

1. To dance; to skip; to friak; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, parids, Gambol'd before them.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queens, Gambol'd on breaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Milton, P. L.
The monsters of the flood
Around them in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales to seaward measures play.

Page.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madeness
That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madeness
Would gambol from.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.
GAM'BL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.
A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols. L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies roes,
And beats in gambols frisk'd before their hoost
Dryden.

2. A frolic; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unsufferable rambles? Hudibras.

GAM'BREL. n. s. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.]

1. The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? It appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

Grew.
2. A crooked piece of wood used by butchers to suspend and by which to suspend the carcasses. Jennings, West Country Words. See also the citation from Beaumont and Fletcher, under To GAM'BREL.

To GAM'BREL. v. a. [from gamba.] To tie by the leg.

Lay by your scorn and pride, they're scurvy qualities,
And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
And carry you gambrel'd thither like a mutton.

Beaumont and Fletcher, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

GAME. n. s. [gaman, Icelandic. a jest; gaman, Goth. delight; joy.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.

Shakespeare.
Let my son Martin disport himself at any game truly antique.
Arbutnot and Pope,
Mart. Scriblerus.

2. Jest; opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities.

Milton, S. A.

4. A single match at play.

It is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases.

Addison, Spectator, No. 53.
There is no man of sense and honesty, but must see and own, whether he understands the game or not, that it is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a public gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.

By. Berkeley, Ess. towards proc. the Ruin of Gr. Brit.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand.

Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other till they see an end of this.

Temple.
7. Field sports; as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and meo,
To let him free from his captivity.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
What arms to use, or nets to make?
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game? Walter.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
slept a company of bustards and cranes.

L'Esrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Submission to his empire tyrannous. Milton, P. L.
There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not what to follow.

Dryden, Fob. Prof.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all bounds the particular game they have in chase.

Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia bear the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloë take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game.

Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that herbivorous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.

Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game.

Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Shakespeare.

Niño, when entering the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.
Densham, To GAME.† v. n. [xamian, Sax.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.
Covetousness will tempt thee to cheat and cozen in gaming. White Duty of Man, ch. 9, § 7.
Coming for any thing considerable is founded upon avarice; and is, if not a direct, yet what is much worse, a deliberate violation of the tenth commandment.

Defens, Sermon on Gaming.

GA'MECOCK. n. s. [game and cock.] A cock bred to fight.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.

Locke.

GAME-EGG. n. s. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under beds of prey,
To make the foul more furious for the fray. Garrick.

GA'MKEEPER. n. s. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GAME-LEG. n. s. [a corruption, according to Mr. Malone, of the British gam, or cam, crooked, and leg.] A lame leg.
Used in the north of England.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicsome; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.
Geron, though old, yet gamesome; kept one end with Cœna. Sidney.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

4. The gamesome wind among her tresses plays, ad curls up those growing riches short. Fairfax.
Bellid, in like gamesome mood. Milton, P. L.
This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.

Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. s. [from gamesome.]
Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.]
Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. s. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.

Shakespeare, M. Wines of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art,
the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies live;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden, Juv.

Could we look into the mind of a frydlen, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and maddlers; her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

Addison, Guard. No. 120.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels.

Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior.

Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker on; but, when all is said, the help of good counsel is that which settles business straight. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamester.

My lord Sands. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,
And was a common gamester to the camp. Shaks.

GA'MING. n. s. [from game, Sax. GAMING.]

The practice of gamesters.

I come, in the next place, to consider the ill consequences which gaming has on the bodies of our female adventurers. It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul, decays the body. Addison, Guard. No. 120.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it; it no way profits either body or mind.

Locke.

GA'MING-HOUSE. n. s. A house where illegal sports are practised, and where gamesters carry on their employment.

The keeper of a gaming-house.

Sherrwood.

Gaming houses are prohibited under severe penalties by several statutes.

Chambers.

GA'MING-TABLE. n. s. A table at which gamesters practise their art.

It is an evident fault for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a public gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.

Jay, Berkeley, Essay, &c.

GA'MMER. n. s. [Of uncertain etymology;]

perhaps from grandmère, and therefore used commonly to old women. Dr.
Johnson.—From good mother. Ray.—
From godmother, perhaps. [Sax. gammē- f.] like the contraction of gaffer from godfather; or from the Goth. gammā, a woman.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer
Gurton's Needle; the name of an old play.

GA'MMERSTANG. n. s. A great foolish

wrestling art. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697. A hoyden, an awkward girl.
Craven Dialect, 1824. The Cumberland
Glossary applies the term to an awkward clumsy fellow. Of unknown etymology.

GA'MMON.† n. s.

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried;
the lower end of the flitch. [Ital. gam-
bone, from gamba; and that perhaps 18 from the Celt. gam, the ham or leg. Our own word was at first gambone. The Spanish word is jamon.

Then came halingy Jone,

And brought a gambone

Of bacon that was really. Skelton, Poems, p. 132.
Ask for what price thy renal tongue was sold:

A rusty gambone of some sev'n years old.

Dryden, Juv.

Gambones, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks.

Dryden, Pri.

2. A kind of play with dice.

In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gambon. Thomson, Autumn.

GA'MUT.† n. s. [gama, Italian. Dr. Johnson.

—It is the Greek letter γ, gamma,
and ut, the name of a musical note.
Guido Aretine distinguished the first note of his scale by the Greek letter, with a view, according to some, of shew-ing that the Greeks were the inventors of music; but, as others think, of recording his own name by this, the initial letter of it.]

1. The first or gravest note in the modern or Guido's scale of music.

2. The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingerings,

I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it;
Things simply good can never be unfit.

Donne, Poems, p. 70.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That run by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in tells, and in a gamut expire. Addison.

GA'N.† pret. of gin. [Sax. ginnan. Dr.

Johnson gives gan as a contraction of began, "as gan of begin;" but it is the regular pret. of the Saxon verb. Nor gin a contraction. See To GIN.

The noble knight gan feel

His vital force to faint.

Spenser.

To GANC.† v. a. [ganciare, from gancio,

a hook, Italian; gancie, French. See
To GAUNCH.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment:
a practice in Turkey, to which Smith
alludes in his Pocockius.

"Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
Gemitu onusti, vel sude trans sinum
Lactantur acies, pendulive
Sanguineis trepidant in unci."

Musa Angl.

Take him away, ganch him, impale him.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

GA'NDER.† n. s. [gandpa, Saxon; gans,

old Fr. and German. See GANZ.]
The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander.

Compter, Rem.

One gander will serve five geese.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GANG.† v. n. [Goth. gaggan, pronounced gangan; gagen, Dutch; gan- gan, Saxon; gan, Scottish.] To go; to walk: an old word not now used, except ludicrously. Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, still the common language of the north of England.

But let them gang alone, —
As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.

Your floating bang gang with their beards open.
Spranger, Ship. Col. Arbutnot.

GANG.† n. s. [from the verb.]
1. A street or road. [Goth. gagg, Sax. gang.] It is retained, provincially, in gangway. See GANGWAY.

2. A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you paderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.

Shakespeare, M. Wreth of Windsor.
As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking.
L'Estrange.

Admitted in among the gang.
He acts and talks as they befriended him. Prior.

GANG-DAYS.† n. s. pl. [Sax. gang-dagaz.]
Days of perambulation. See GANGWEK.
GA'NGHON. [French.] A kind of flower.

GA'NGLIOM. n. s. [γαγγλίον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.

Bonesetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or psammomatous protrusion of some part of a joint.
Wierman.

To GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.]
To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siccated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GA'NGHENE.† n. s. [gangrene, Fr. gange, gange, Gr. from γανος, to consume, to eat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lost limb away. Wallar.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wierman, Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is fostered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity.

Addison, Spect.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrene, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Gangrened members must be kept warm.
Before the sabbat parts are tainted to decay. Dryd.

To GANGRE'NE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immediately
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton, S. A.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after operation, if that fat be not speedily digested out.
Wierman, Surgery.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.]
Mortified: producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acriminous, corrodes the vessels, producing hemorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

GA'NGWAY.† n. s.

1. A thoroughfare, or passage. Used in Kent, according to Grose. This is also the Sax. gangweg. See GANG.

2. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other. Dict.

GA'NGWEK.† n. s. [Sax. gang-wuca.]
Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. This name is still retained in the north of England.

It [berch] serveth well to the decking up of houses and banquetting-rooms, for pieces of plumage, and for beautifying of streets in the cross or gang-week, and such like.

Gervard's Herbal, ed. Johnson, p. 1478.

GA'NTELOPE.† n. s. [gantlet is only cor-

GA'NTLET. } rupted from gantelope,
gant, all; and loopen, to run, Dutch.
Dr. Johnson. — Skinner deduces it from Ghent, and the Dutch verb, as if the punishment was first practised at that place.

In later times, the word has been found in the shape of Ghent-loop, on this supposition, whether justly or not. See the Brit. Crit. vol. ii. p. 390. Dr. Johnson gives no instance of gantelope, but only of the corruption gantlet. A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes?

Dryden, Jun.

He is fain to run the gantelope through the tortors and reproaches of his own conscience.

Scott's Works, (Sermon in 1680.) § 29.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Leche.

GA'NZ.† n. s. [ganza, Spanish, a goose; old Fr. and Germ. gans; Celt. ganz; Lat. ganza. Celt. kan, white. V. Wachter, Gloss. Germ. in GANA.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuous was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

What modest indignation can forbear stamping at the punishment of those men, who, as if Deming Gonnales his engine, they had been mounted by his gannets from the moon to the empyreal heaven?
Dr. Hall, Invis. World, § 7.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And savour strongly of the ganza. Huallius, if S.

GAOL.† n. s. [gaol, Welsh; gaol, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The old Fr. is gaiole or gaole; low Lat. gaiole, from cavea or caveole, a cage for birds; cavea, hollow, and thence any hole or place of confinement; gaiole, a cavern, So. Goth. The Ficarid call a bird-cage gayolle.]

A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol,
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shaks. Timon.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

In the morning usually the thief is sent to the gaol.
Bacon, and Fl. Mortal Maid.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison, to commit to gaol.

Galings vagabonds was chargeable, petrous and of so open example. Bacon.

GA'OLDIVERY. n. s. [gaol and deliver.]
The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth the aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or gold-derry call. Dennis.

These make a general gold-derry of souls, not for punishment. South.

GA'OLER. n. s. [from gaol.] A keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steely gaoler is the friend of men. Shakespeare.

I know not how or why my gaol goiter,
Hard as his iron, and insolent has you't
When put in vulgar hands, Clandulus,
Put off the brute. Dryden, Cicerone.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, all the death of her gaol. Taylor.

GAP.† n. s. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.
Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gaps. Tusser, Husbandry.

You have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the bridge for the house of David. Ecc. viii.

With tempests and with furies to the bounds
And cryal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton, P. L.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the Christian common-weal; manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of Christendom. Ainslie.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Turcan herdman with his spear,
Fall in the gap, and spears are hunted bear,
And bears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopp'd. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Not is it any bosh or gap in the works of nature. Merc.

6. Any interstice; a vacancy.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were discover'd. Shakespeare, West. Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps.
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in succeeding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels meeting on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a gap, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow. Dr. Johnson. It is rather, perhaps, to patch up matters for a time.

z 2

His policy consists in setting traps,
In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.
Swift.

9. To stand in the gar. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger; a phrase borrowed from our version of the Scriptures: "He said he would have destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the gap." Ps. cvi. 23. Comm. Pr. Where gap, however, means breach; which is the reading of the elder version of the Psalms. See also Ezek. xxii. 30.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this?
Who would stand in the gap? Lecky.

GAP-TOOTHED.† adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth. So Dr. Johnson defines the word which Dryden supposed to be Chaucer's. But the true word is gap-toothed, with a very different meaning. See GAT-TOOTHED.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mining lady priestess and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Beth.
Dryden, Fab. Pref.

To GAP.† v. n. zeapan, yppan, zeppan, to open, Sax. whence also our chap. See To CHAP. Gap was at first written gap.]

To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

See how he gapeth, in this drunken night,
As though he would swallow anon right!
Hold close thy mouth, man! Chaucer, Mancip. Prolog.
Coping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little hazy by say vapour.
Arbuthnot.

See stretches, gap, unglues her eyes.
Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind,
Gap for the food which they must never find.
Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gap upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave; with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
Denham.

To thy fortune be not thus a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?
And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear.
Dryden, Par.

4. With after.

As a servant earnestly desireth [in the margin, gapeth after] the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work. Job, vii. 2.

What shall we say of those who spend their days
In gaping after court-favour and preferences?
L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard.
South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assumes my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.

Shakespeare, Ham. V. I.
The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth
gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South.
The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The plank, their plucky coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side.
Dryden.
That all these actions can be performed by alignment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound.
Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another, for want of a caesura in this poem.
Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if I must can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool he is.
Roscmon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape 't anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foresees
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

The king gaped and gazed upon her with open mouth.
| Enders, iv. 51.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; and the end of all this is to cause laughter; a very mooter in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at.
Dryden, Duresser.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjur'd head is bow'd, Betwixt retreat. Gay, Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.
Job, xvi. 10.

GAPER.† n. s. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who stares foolishly.
Guard, put by those gapers,
And gentlemen-ushers, see the gallery clear.
Bever, and Fl. Bloody Brother.

3. One who longs or craves.

Goods and livings were not small;
The gapers for them bare the world in hand
For ten year's space. Mar. for Mag. p. 370.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained wet near into every gaper's mouth.
Carver, Serv. of Curmould.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so

Edgar is a happy weapon; Ethalgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR.† v. a. [Icel. giora, to make; Su. Goth. giora; Dan. gior.] To cause; to make; to force. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says, admitting however that it was still in use in Scotland. It is also still used in Lancashire, and other parts of the north of England.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gar thee givest?
What! hast thou e'er of thy tender lamb's pign? Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn?

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GARB.† n. s. [garbe, French. Dr. Johnson. Rather perhaps from the Ital. garbo, fineness, neatness.]

1. Dress; cloths; habit.

This Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb,
Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.
Milton, P. L.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physics, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

In hose and doublet,
The horse-boy's garb. Beaumont, and Fl. Lee's Engl.
Homer's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal; but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear. Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakespeare, L. Lear.

Some noblemen of that kingdom [Ireland] lived in a higher garb, and made greater expenses than the noblemen in England were able to do.

Id. Clarendon, 156, iii. 707.

4. In heraldry, a sheaf of wheat, or any other grain. [Latin, garba.]

GARBAGE.† n. s. [garbear, Spanish.

This etymology is very doubtful. Dr. Johnson. Serenius deduces it from the Goth. gar, blood or gore, and bagge or bagls, a little sack or bag.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatiated, desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravens find the lamb,
Lungs after for the gorge. Shakespeare, Cymb.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A film more senseless than the ro'gry
Of old Anusip and ang'ry,
That out of garbage of cattle
Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.

Who, without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?
Racine.

When you receive condempn punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.
Dryden.

GARBAGED.† adj. [from garbage.] That hath the garbage pulled out. Sterndool.

GARBEL.† n. s. A plank next the keel of a ship. Bailey.

GARBIDGE.† n. s. Corrupted from garbage. All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, and garbridge is good manure for land.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GARBISH.† n. s. Corrupted from garbage; but occurring in the old dictionary of Barret, (where the verb garbish also is found,) under the word bovel.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GARBISH.† v. a. [from the noun.] To excrementate; as, "to garbish fish."

Barret.

To GARBLE.† v. a. [garbellare, Italian.]

1. To sift and cleanse spices. This is the primary sense, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, but not overlooked in our old lexicography.

Upon the 7. of April 1690, he [Dr. Gwinne] with seven others were appointed commissioners by his majesty for garbling tobacco.

Ward, Hist. of Gresham Coll. and Prof. p. 364.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

Garble, in Saxon, signifies a sieve; and garb is a sieve.

2. To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake.

Dryden.

Had our author set down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Chopce, Phil. Princ. GARBLE. v. n. [from garble.]

There, where I have garner'd up my hoar, Where either I must live, or bear no life.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GARNER.* n. s. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garner is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of bluish; its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby.

Hill.

The garner seems to be a species of the caruncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

Woodward, Met. Fossils.

TO GAR'NISH. v. s. [garnir, French.]

Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in gar-niture of their kinds, that they are inferior in furniture of their hands.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Plainness, which pleases your eyes, is an age-old, is lost, without the gar-niture of show.

Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very anxious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison, Spectator.

GARROUS, adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickled meat of fish.

In a civet-cant an offensive odour proceeds, partly from his food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a gross excretion, and oldest separation. Brown.

GARRAN. See GARRON.

GARRRET, n. s. [garrit, the tower of a citadel, French. Dr. Johnson. — From the Germ. wart, quasi guarret, a fortification; or warten, to observe. Wachter. And this from the Su. Goth. wara, which means both to observe and to defend.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The nob, commission'd by the government, Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryd. Jen. John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made Sole patron of the building trade; Leaving the arts the spacious air, With license to build castles there; And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence, To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by day-light, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRRETED, adj. [from garret.] Protected by turrets. See the etymology of GARRET.

The high cliffs are by sea inaccessible round about, saving in one only place towards the East, where they proffer an uneasy landing place for boats; which, being forced with a garretted wall, admitteth entrance through a gate, and is within presently commanded by a hardly climbable hill. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

GARRRETER, n. s. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

To pen with garretiers, obscure and shabby, Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abode. Parnassus of Literature.

GARRISON, n. s. [Garrison, French. Dr. Johnson. — Our own word is written Garrison by Chaucer. The old French, however, is garison, "vivres et munitions d'une place de guerre." Lacombe. In this form, from the Su. Goth. uatera, to defend; in that of garrison, from uarna, with a similar signification.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me, Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garison. Sidney.

To GASCONADE, v. n. [from the noun.]

To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH, v. a. [from hacher, to cut, to hack, French. Skinner. Hacher, Dr. Johnson should have added, means also to cut into small pieces, to shred; and in this primary sense, which he has overpassed, the word gash is in our own language, which renders its derivation from hacher still more likely.]

1. To cut into small pieces, as applied to cloth; to shred.

To what end do we juggle and gash the garments that are sowed together to cover our bodies, but that thereby we may, as it were, by most food and ridiculous anatomy, open and lay forth to the eyes of all men what kind of people we are in our inward hearts; juggled, (God wot), and ragged, vain, light, and nothing sound?

- Trens. of Bunting's Serms.* (1576), p. 239.
2. To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their men were found grievously gashed or gored to death.

It is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image, and to polish it, requires great art and dexterity.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or sear'd with burning steel. Rome, Royal Convert.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Phillips.

GASH, v. s. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

His glancing on his helmet, made a large And open gash therein; were not his target, That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lapt off.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Hamilton dore Newton almost to the end of the lista; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.

Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clow'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectareous humour issuing flow'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was furd of back-sword and cudgel-play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.

Arbutnot.

GASHFUL, adj. [gash and full.] Full of gashes; looking terribly. One might at once pronounce this word to be intended for gashful, if two authors did not use it, at a distance of almost forty years; and if a contemporary had not cited the lines of the oldest, (which indeed are a fine and just satire on a certain kind of hypocrites,) where gashful is the word. See Sir Miles Sandys's Essays, p. 190. Yet Mr. Nares in his Glossary has no doubt that gashful, (from gash), i. e. horrid, frightful, is here the word intended.

'Tis not the holding of thy hands so high,
Nor yet the purr spouting of these eyes
'Tis not your mimic mouths, nor antic faces,
Nor scripture phrases, nor affected graces,
Nor prodigal upbidding of thine eyes,
Whom gashful balls do seem to pelt the skies;
'Tis not the strict reforming of your hair
So close, that all the neighbour skull is bare;
'Tis not the drooping of thy head so low,
Nor yet the louring of thy sullen brow—
No, no; 'tis none of this that God regards;
Such sort of foole their own applause rewards.

Quercus, Hist. of Juss. (1690), sign. II. 2.
Come death, and welcome; which spoke, comes
In a gashful, horrid, meagre, terrible, ugly shape.

Gayton on D. Quia. (1654), p. 69.

GASKEETS, n. s. pl. On ship-board, the small cords used to fasten the sails to the yards when furled up.

Chambers.

GASKINS, n. s. pl. [from Gascogne.

See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Come, come George, let's be merry and wise;
The child's a fatherless child, and say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins, 'twere worse than knot-grass, he would never grow after it.

Brown and Fl. Kn. of the Burn, Part.

GASOMETER, n. s. [gas, and meter, Gr. gasmeter, Fr.] An instrument said to be invented by Lavoisier and Meunier to measure the quantity of gas employed in experiments.

To GASP, v. n. [from gasp, Skinner, from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius. Rather from the Su. Goth. gáspa, gespa, to yawn, to gape.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gash.

Dryden, Virg.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.

Dryden.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood

Flows from the trunk. Dryden, Æn.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.

Dryden.

A scanting of wit lay gasping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish.

Dryden, Spens. Friar.

The rich countrymen in Ausaria were faint and gaping for breath.

Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from

him.

Demands to see his friends. Addison, Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death.

Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he gasps away his breath.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as Nature never expresses desire by gasping.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how deeply they loved one another, and gaped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

Spectator.

GASP, v. n. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

When he was at the last gasp, he said, Thou, like a fury, takest us out of this present life; but the king of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life.

2 Macc. vii. 9.

His fortunes ill be speeches, and his noise
Is at last gasp. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, show it now.

Addison, Rosamond.

To GAST, v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See

AGHAST.] To make agast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best aligned spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether guard by the noise I made,
Fell suddenly he dead. Shakespeare, L. Lear.
To GASTER, v. a. Saxon, gast, a ghost.
This is the word of our old lexicography.] To scare; to terrify.

The sight of the lady has gaster'd him.

Brown and Fl. W. at sea. Weapons.

GASTFUL.* See GHAUSTFUL.

GASTLY.* See GHAUSTLY.

GASTNESS, n. s. [from gast. This is not the uniform reading of the editions of Shakespeare; but it seems to be the true one; gestures is the word which occurs in the quartos, gastness in the first folio.] Fright; amazement.

Look you pale, mistress?—

Do you perceive the gastness of her eye?—

Nay, if you stare, we shall learn more anon.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GASTRICK, adj. [gastrique, French, from γαστρ, Greek.] Belonging to the belly or stomach.

GASTRILOQUIST, n. s. [Fr. gastrilogue, from γαστρ, Greek, and loqui, Lat.] A person who speaks inwardly, and whose voice seems to come afar off; usually called a ventriloquist. See VENTRILLOQUIST.

Gastrilques are persons, who have acquired the art of modifying their voice, so that it affects the ear of the hearers, as if it came from another person, or from the clouds, or from under the earth.

Reid.

GASTROGRAPHY, n. s. [γαστρ and γράφω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptance it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine.

Sharp, Surgery.

GOSTROTOMY, n. s. [γαστρ and τομή.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT, adj. The pretense of get.

Moves get him up into the mount. Ez. xxiv. 18.

Our daughter,

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gats
For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

GAT-TOOTHED, adj. [Sax. gat, a goat, and toothed.] Having a goat's tooth; having a lickerish tooth. This word Dryden has converted into gap-toothed, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into his Dictionary; which however gives no meaning to the passage where it is used, and is not the true word. Gat-toothed Mr. Tyrwhitt places among words in Chaucer not understood. But considering the disposition of the Wife of Bath, the poet's meaning in gat-toothed seems clear enough. Gat or gat is, by our elder writers, often used for goat.

She could make much of wandering by the way;

Gat-toothed was she, wofully for to say.

Chaucer, C. T. Prod. Wife of Bath.

GATE, n. s. [Sax. gat, gate, gate; Goth. gati; old Fr. gat, a gate.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!

My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee.

Shakespeare.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.
Know'st thou the way to Dover? —
Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shaks.

3. An avenue; an opening.
Austria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolly, Hist.

4. A way; a passage; a road. [Ice. gate, a street.] Thus the town-gate is the town-street, in the North of England. See also GAIT.

The gate of a country is not like the gate of an house; I mean, it is not the utmost limit of the land, as the other is of the building; but rather a difficult pass to be surmounted before we can penetrate into the most valuable part of the country. Drummond, Trav. p. 246.

5. A goat. [Sax. geit, yac: Ice. geit.] Northerly spoken, says the contemporary commentator on Spenser. It is now used perhaps only in Scotland.
Thilke same kiddle —
Was too very foolish and unwise;
For on a time, in summer season,
The gate her dam that had good reason,
Yode forth abroad, Etc. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

GA'TED.* adj. [from gate.] Having gates.
Vain Art, thou pigmy power!
How dost thou swell, and strut, with human pride,
To show thy littleness! What childish toys —
Thy hundred-gated capitals, or those Where three days' travel left us much to ride.

Young, Night Th. 9.

GA'TEVIN. n. s. The vena porta.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatewin which disperse that blood. Bacon, Hen. VII.

GA'TEWAY.† n. s. [gate and way.]
1. A way through gates of enclosed grounds.
Gateways between enclosures are so many, that they cannot cart between one field and another.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A building to be passed at the entrance of the area to a large mansion.
To GA'THER.† v. a. [zabehuan, zabehuan, Sax. Our own word was at first gader: Chaucer so writes it.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place.
Gather stones — and they took stones and made an heap. Gen.

2. To get in harvest.
The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20.

3. To pick up; to glean.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones. Is. lxxi. 10.
I will send this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
For women gain'd, but slighted and scorn'd!
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden, Spun. Friar.

5. To assemble.
They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon, New Atlantis.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.
That that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.
Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Ps. cxi. 47.

8. To sweep together.
The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. St. Matt. xiii. 47.

9. To collect charitable contributions.
Few Sundays come over our head, but decayed householders or shipwright merchants are gathered for. Dr. King, Sermon. (1615.) p. 57.

10. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather officers to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Is. lvi. 8.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne:
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.
His gates ground upon her in the chase;
Now breaks upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework; to contract into small folds.
14. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakespeare.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavour'd to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.
From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Peterson.

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton, P. L.

Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To contract; to get.
All faces shall gather blackness. Isa. li. 6.

16. TO GATHER BREATH. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.
The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GA'THER.† v. n.
1. To be condensed; to thicken.
If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East, and West, on airy couriers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison, Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came into them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. To assemble.
There gathered unto him from Jerusalem a very great multitude of men, and women, and children. 1 Esdr. viii. 91.

4. To generate pus or matter. See the 4th sense of GATHERING.
GA'THER. n. s. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.
Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the garters,
Part canons, periwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERABLE.* adj. [from gather.] Deducible from premised grounds.
The priesthood of the first-born is gatherable; hence, because the Levites were appointed to the service of the altar, instead of the first-born, and as their kephor, or price of redemption. Num. iii. 41.

GA'THERER. n. s. [from gather.]
1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will send this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Watson, Pref. to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.

Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. Mary, Virg.

GA'THERING.† n. s. [from gather.]
1. An assembly.
There be three things that mine heart feareth — the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclesi. xxi. 5.

2. An accumulation; a collection.
To receive the gatherings together of the waters which were to run from amongst the hills, and the mountain and hills raised upon the face of the antediluvian globe. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 122.

3. A collection of charitable contributions.
Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

4. Generation of pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints had subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Chr. Piety.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. s. A species of Cornelian cherry.
GAUD.† n. s. [Skinner imagines this word may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gayauc; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Gaven Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gawadid, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy; thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland, this word is still retained both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Took pretends, that gaud is the past participle of the Sax. gāvan, to give; gaved, gav'd, gavd, gaud. Dyer, of Purley, ii. 267. But the true etymon seems to be the Icel. gaeda, ornare. See Dr. Jamieson's Suppl. in V. To GAUD.] An ornament; a fine thing; a toy; a trinket; a bawble. It is not now much used.

A pair of velvet blacke as sable
She toke, and byng my necke about;
Upon the gaudes all without
Was wraye of gold, Pur repouer.

Gauze, Conf. Am. b. 8.
Their faythe is a substance of thynges unseene,
and not of gaudes and fables apperyng to the eye.
Italy, V. 1. a Course, 4to. (1543.) fol 31. b.
He bath put it into the minds of good Christian princes and magnates to disburden her (the church) of those stinking and defiled gaudes.

Herman, Transl. of Beca's Sermon. (1547.) p. 82.
He stole the impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, concoits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, orientals, Shakespeare.
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
To all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
Is give me audience. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.
Some bound for Guiney, golden doat to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbanis finest holland bear.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

To GAUD,† v. n. [gaudeo, Lat.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing. Dr. Johnson produces an example from Shakespeare, where the true reading is go, and gaud is merely a conjecture of Warburton, viz.
Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me.

Com. of Err.

GA'UDED,* adj. [from gaud.] 1. Decorated with beads or trinkets.

About her arms she bore

A pair of beads, gauded all with green. Chaucer, C. T. Procl.

Our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white, and danace, in Their nicely gauded cheeks. Shakespeare, Coriol.

GA'UDERY, n. s. [from gaud.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon, Ess.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about it but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears,
of late, but in the high mode, the blustering gaud, and utmost gaudery of youth, with clothes as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it.
South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarmish'd gaudy known. Dryden.

GA'UDILY,† adv. [from gaudy.] Showily. Their persons are elegantly turned, gaudily decorated, and highly performed.

Guthrie, India in general.

GA'UDINESS,† n. s. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

She shall have more thanks for the poor's wardrobe (of her procuring) than her own; and for their warmth than her own gaudiness.

Whitlock, Mann, of the Eng. p. 351.
Neither are the men much less guilty of this pernicious folly, who, in imitation of a gaudiness and foppery in dress introduced of late years into our kingdom, cannot find materials in their own country, worthy to adorn their bodies of clay, while their minds are naked of every valuable quality.

Swift, Sermon on the State of Ireland.

GA'UDY,† adj. [from gaud.] This adjective at first was gaudish, and is frequent in the writings of Bale.]

1. Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Coolly thy lauit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay mees that people the sun beams.

Milton.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.

Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold.

Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gaze every where.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

2. Rejoicing; festal.

Come,

Let's have another gaudy night; call to me
All my laid captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

'Tis joy clad like joy,
Which is more honest than a cunning grief
That's only clad with sables for a show,
But gaudy hearted.

Massey, Old Law.

GA'UDY, n. s. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be contented with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Chyene.

GAVE, The preterite of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it;
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with loving sav'st it.

Dorset.

GA'VEL,† n. s.

1. A provincial word for ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days.

Mortimer.

2. A tribute; a toll; a yearly rent. [Sax. zapol.] More usually written gabel.

See GABEL.

GA'VELKIND,† n. s. Compounded by Lambert, in his Exposition of Saxon words, of gylfe, eal, cyn, omnis cognatione proximi data. Verstegan, in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, calls it gavel-kind, quasi, give all kind, that is, give to each child his part. But Taylor, in his History of Gavelkind, would derive it from the British gafel, a hold or tenure, and cennor, or cennedh, generatio aut familia; and so gavel cen- nedh might signify tenura generationis. But whatever is the true etymology, it signifies in law a custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent.

Cowell.

Among other Welsh customs, he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind.

Baron on Ireland.

Owen was no sooner dead, but the custom of gavel-kind, which some think has ruined most families in Wales, occasioned great division amongst his sons.

Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 294.

GA'VELOC,* n. s. [Su. Goth. gavelack, Sax. gavelock.] An iron crown or lever; a strong iron bar. Common in the north of England, Westmoreland, and Craven Dialects, and Brockett's N. Country Words. In some places it is called also gaffack.

To GAUGE, v. a. [gauger, jauge, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.

Derham, Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gauging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel.

Pope, Essay on Homer's Battles.

GAUGE, n. s. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by.

Mason, Mech. Exerc.
If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth.

Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high, and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.

Archibald, Hist. of John Bull.

GA'UGE, n. s. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction: and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and exchequer.

Carew on Cornwall.

GAUL,* n. s. [Lat. Gallia.]

1. An ancient name of France. It is yet often used by our poets for modern France.

Here wad' the flame that still's ambitious flames
The proud threats of Gaul's superlative slaves.

Watson on the Marriage of the King, (1761.)

2. An old inhabitant of France; and in poetry a modern Frenchman.

Nor did the Gaul

Not find him once a bawful foe. Philips, Blenheim.

Wherever the Celtæ or Gauls are mentioned by ancient writers, we seldom fail to hear of their druids and their bards.

Blair on the Poems of Ossian, p. 21.

GA'ULISH.* adj. Relating to the Gauls. See GAUL.

The Romans having subdued the Gauls, introduced part of their language among them; and a mixture of half Latin, half Gaulish or Celtic, constituted the roman language; of which the modern French is only an improvement. Chambers. Galliard is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish, art, genius, and gay. Johnson.

To GAUM.* v. n. [Icei. gaum, attention, gaima, to take a view of.] To understand; a northern word; as I do not gaum y<sup>e</sup>, i. e. I do not understand you, according to Grose. In Yorkshire, according to Ray, to mind or look at. We pronounce gaum, says Ray, under that word gaum; and speak it of persons that unhandsoomly gaze or look about them. Gaum is clearly the true word. It is still in use in Cheshire, and throughout the north of England.

GA'UNLESS.* adj. [from gaum.] Stupid; awkward; lubberly; senseless. Lancashire dialect, and other parts of the north.

To GAUNCH.* v. a. See TO GAUCH.

Among them are more frequent and bolder cautions than
In the ark of Turkey, as empling, gaunching, flaying, Aloud, Voyage to the Levant, p. 94.

GAUNT.* adj. [As if gaunt, from zeppan, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old;
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who obtains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping breeds lean time here I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt;
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean my children's looks;
And therein fasting thou hast made me gaunt;
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Two mairiffs gaunt and grim her sight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood imbued. Dryden, Fob.

GA'UNTLY.* adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET.* n. s. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A single gauntlet now with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Feel but the difference soft and rough;
This is a gauntlet, that a maul.
Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryden, Fob.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil,
Or who with gauntlets gave and took the foil. Dryden, Fob.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gauntlets, those declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.
So to repel the Vandal of the stage,
Our ve'n' hand resumes his tragick rage;
He throu the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southern.

To GAUVE.* v. n. To stare. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697. Still in use. Craven Dialect, 1824, viz. To stare vacantly. GA'UVISON.* n. s. [from gauze.] A weak foolish fellow; a silly staring fellow. North. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

GAVOU'† n. s. [gavotte, French; said to be derived from the Gavots, a people inhabiting a mountainous district in France, called Gap. Chambers.] A kind of dance, probably resembling our hornpipe. Cotgrave calls it a kind of brawl danced, commonly, by one alone.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, arabesques, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scribnerus.
GAUZE.† n. s. [Fr. gaze, "the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions, or pursework; also, the slight stuff, tiffany; also, a mantle, &c. also, wealth, substance, and a prince's treasury." Cotgrave. This refers us to the Lat. gaza.] A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken clothes were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin like gauze.

Arbutnot on Coins.
Hircodors, and demasks, and tabbies and gauzes,
Are lately brought over. Swift.

GA'WAV.* n. s. [probably from the Fr. gabe, mocked, flouted. A dunce, fool, or blockhead; which Grose confines to our northern dialect; but it is not uncommon in the southern, with the pronunciation of gady. A low expression.

GA'WV.* See GAUC.

GAWK.* n. s. [xeac, Saxon, a cuckoo; geck, Germ. a fool.]

1. A cuckoo.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland. Dr. Johnson says, and he might have said in the north of England also.

In the north of England, persons thus imposed upon, [made April fools,] are called April gaucks. A gauck or gauck is properly a cuckoo; and is used here metaphorically, in vulgar language, for a fool. The cuckoo is, indeed, every where a name of contempt. Gauks, in the Teutonic is rendered stultus, fool; whence also our northern word a gale or gauly. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GA'WKY.* n. s. A stupid, half-witted, or awkward person. See GAWK.

GA'WKY.* adj. Awkward; ungainly; still so used in the north of England.

A large half-length of Henry Darnley represents him tall, awkward, and gauly.

Pennant, Tour in Sco. d.
To GAWM. See To GAUM.

GAWN.* n. s. [corrupted for gallan.] A small tub or lading vessel. A provincial word.

GA'WNTREE.* n. s. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY.* adj. [gay, Fr. gae, Celt. gae, Icel. joy, mirth; gáa, Greek.

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolic.

Smooth face the waves, the seaplys, gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.
K'n rival wit did Voiture's fate deplore,
And gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay.

Ye have respect to him that weareth the gay. Rav. vi. 9.

James, li. 3.

3. SPECIOUS.

Neither your fyne disguising, nor your painted colours, nor your gay rhetoric, nor witty inventions, can so hide and cover the truth that it shall not appear.

Mrs. Cosmore, Answer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 354.

Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric. That hath so well been taught her dazzling face. Milton, Comus.

GAY.* n. s. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts as emblem, as they do upon gay and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives' tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY.* n. s. [gayeté, French; from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties your youth requires.

To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

GA'YLY.† adv. See GAILY.

1. Merrily; cheerfully; airily.

Scot thou how gayly in young master goes,
Vaunting himself upon his rising toes? J. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

The ladies, gayly dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dyes, and paint the sunny morn. Gay.
Like some fair flow'r, that early spring supplies,
That gayly blooms, but e'en in blossoming dies. Pope.

GA'YNESS.* n. s. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use. Dr. Johnson says, and he gives no example; but the first of the following he has applied to gayety, unjustifiably converting the poet's gayness to that word.

Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

Delicacy of fare, softness of lodging, gayness of attire. J. Hall, Epist. Dec. li. Ep. 10.

The Creator — is willing mankind should serve themselves off his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warmth, inclosures, beauties, and colours; not only to please and please in, but also curiosity and necessity and plainness in, and gayness. J. Hall, Sat. ii. 99.

GA'YOMIE.* adj. [from gay.] Full of gayety.

And, sterd with heat of gayome youth, did vent,
With warlike troops, the Norman coast to enter. Mor. for Mag. p. 653.

To GAZE.† v. n. [ἀγάζεσθαι, or rather gazein, to see, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — Or perhaps the Heb. chazan, to see.] To look intently and earnestly; with eagerness.

What seest thou there? King Henry's deadien,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

From some east her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving free. Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou shalt not by those things that are precious in her, but by those eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakespeare, Tit. li. 3.

High stations tumble, but not bliss create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a wain as writhed as a king. Young.

To GAZE.† v. a. To view steadfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wondering eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton, P. L.

Appal'd I gaze'd

The godlike presence; for 'aft'ward his brow
Displeas'd, temper'd it with mild cooers,
Look'd down reluctant on me.

Abnside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.

GAZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intenz regard; look of engerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lightn'd with her beauty's beams,
And thereby ill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.
Do but once a wild and wanton heed,
If any air of music touch their ears,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest stand,
By the sweet power of music. Shak. Mer. of Ven.
Not a mouth.

'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes

Than what you look on now. Shaksp. Wint. Telo.
With sweet gaze.

Or upon admition, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton, P. L.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connection as to our understanding, snars out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Dryden, Preface to Virg.
After having stood at gaze before this gaze, he discovered an inscription. Addison, Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Betsey'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the seem and gaze;
To grin in brazen frowns, under tann'd
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton, S. A.
GAZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear.
The ravish'd hearts of *gaze*ful men might rear
To admiration of that heavenly light.

GAZEHOUD. n. s. [gaze and hound; canis
agaster]; Skinner. A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

Seest thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!
Tickle.

GAZE' L. n. s. An Arabian deer.

Wild gazels are caught by sending into the herd one already taken and tam'd with a noose so fasten'd to his horns, as to entangle the animal that first approaches to oppose him.

Goldsmith, Nat. Hist.

GAZEMENT. n. s. [from gaze.] View.

Then forth he brought his snowy Fortinella—Cover'd of from people's gaze with a veil. Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 17.

GAZER. n. s. [from gaze.] He that gazes;
one that looks intently with engerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did show,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them three,
And gazes sense with double pleasure fed. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll play more gazers than the basilisk.

Shakspere, Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.
His learned ideas give him a transcendental dis-light; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gaze never observed.
Watts, Logic.

GAZET. n. s. [Ital. gazetta.] A Venetian halfpenny. See GAZETTE.

Since you have said the word, I am content,
But will not give a gaze less.

GAZETTE. n. s. [Gazetta is a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice.

Dr. Johnson. — It was a kind of literary newspaper, in single sheets, published at Venice in the sixteenth century, which was sold for a gazet. The foglio d' avvisi, from the circumstance of its price, has given the name of gazette to newspapers in many countries. At first, we used, in the plural, gazetti. Our gazettes began to be regularly printed in 1665. A paper of news; a paper of public intelligence.
It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable. Dr. Johnson says; but the most ancient and correct accentuation is on the last.

O, I shall be the fable of all feasts,
The scepter of the gaze, sibyls' tale,
And, which is worst, ev'n talk for ordinaries.

B. Jonson, Fac.

They carry in their pockets Tacitus,
And the gazette, or Gallo-Belgicus.

I am glad to hear from abroad in the High Dutch gazette, that there is a treaty of exchange in hand between Prince Rupert and Prince Casimir of Poland. Wotton, Rem. p. 579.
And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger grows, they challenge all;
Print out additions to their feasts,
And encumbers in gazettes. Hudibras.

As English gentlemen, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.
The scepter of the gaze is mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette.

Addison, Guardian.

All, but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

To GAZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To insert in a gazette. A common word in conversation; as the dissolution of partnership is gazetted; his promotion is gazetted.

GAZETTE. n. s. [from gazette.]
1. A writer of news.

Mount now, to Gallo-Belgicus appeat
As deep a statesman as a gazetteer. Donne, Verses on Cuyart the Traveller.

2. An officer appointed to publish news by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

Saith is no more: I feel it die:
No gazetter more innocent than I. Pope.

3. A newspaper.

Glasses and bottles, pipes, and gazetteers,
As if the table, ev'n it itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene. Thomson, Autumn.

They have drawn through columns of gazeters and advertisers for a century together.
Burke on the State of the Nation.

GAZINGSTOCK. n. s. [gaze and stock.]

1. A person gazed at with scorn and abhorrence.

I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazing-stock. Naham, iii. 6.

Ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions. Ileb. x. 33.

Those things are offences to us, by making us
gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Reg.

2. Any object gazed at.

Every eye that is transported, and every heart that is fired with that immodest gazingstock, are so many spoils and trophies of their temptations.

Ep. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

GAZON. n. s. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass,
cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries.

Harria.

GE. [Saxon.] A particle often prefixed to Saxon verbs, participles, and verbal nouns.

This prepositional [prefix] was of our ancestors very much used, and is yet exceedingly used in the Low Dutch; where, according to their usual manner of pronouncing with aspiration, they use to put an h to it, and so make it gh. We have since altered it from ge to y; which yet we seldom use in prose, and sometimes in poetry for the encrasement of syllables; as when we say, geworden,
gepleet, geyerd, geyerd, and the like.

Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

To GEAL. v. n. [old Fr. geler, "to congeal with cold." Northgrave.] To congeal. It is still a northern word, meaning to be benumbed with cold. See also GEALABLE.

Receiving the dew of heaven into the gaping shell, it (the mother-pearl) forms little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard, and good, as it were.

Parthenia Sacra, (1635.) p. 190.

GEAR. n. s. [Sax. gearn, to prepare,
to make ready; gearp, provision, apparatus. Often written geer.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements, dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous geer. Spenser, F. Q.

When he found her bound, strip from her geer,
And vile tormentors ready saw in place, Faifair.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again.

Addison, Guardian.

To me some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday geer.
You think some goddess from the sky
Descended ready cut and dry. Suff.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Theoclus;
His scourge reach'd, and his horse made fresh;
then took her angry run
At king Eumelus, brake his geers. Chapman, Iliad.

The frauds he learn'd in his fantastick years
Made him unseemly in his lawful geers. Dryden.

3. Stuff.

They burn frankincense, and other sweet sa-vours; and light also a great number of wax candles and tapers; not supposing that gear to be as any thing available to the divine nature.

Robinson, Tr. of More; Utopia, li. 11.

If Fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear. Shakspere, Merch. of Ven.

Wet! Do you have tobacco?
Rog. Surly I love it, but it loves not me; yet with your reverence I'll be bold.

Wet. Pray light it, Sir. — How do you like it?
Rog. I promise you, it is notable stinking gear indeed. Beaumont and Fl. Scorpious Lady.

4. [In Scotland.] Goods or riches; as,
he has gear enough.

5. The furniture of a draught-horse.

She rides before the wao to order the horses to their geers. Bamford, No. 155.

6. A general word for business, things, or matters.

That to Sir Calidore was easy geere. Spenser, F. Q. vi. li. 6.

I will remedy this gear ere long.
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Why, hear you curse? how comes this gear to pass?

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

When once her eye

Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.

Milton, Comus.

To GEAR.† v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; as, "anugly geared, i. e. neatly dressed. North." Ray, and Grose.

GE'ARON.† adj. [A word which I find only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says; without offering any etymology, and with the definition only of wonderful, applied to his single example from Moth. Hub-berd's Tale. It is in our old lexicography, as well as in Spenser, for rare.
See Sherwood's Dict. And, according to Groat, it is an Essex word for scarce, hard to procure. It is apparently the Goth. geis; usgerison, to be amazed, to wonder.] Rare; uncommon; wonderful.

The lady, hearkning to his senseful speech,
Found nothing that he said unmeet nor geison.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iv. 37.

It to teaches seem'd strange and geison.
Spenser, Heb. Tale.

Such as this age, in which all good is geison.
Spenser, Via. of the World's Vanity.

It was frosty winter's season,
And faire Flora's wealth was geison.

Grove, Philomet. Sec. Ode.

GREAT. n. s. [corrupted from jet.] The hole through which the metal runs into the mold. Maxon, Mech. Ezer.

GE'ERISH.† See GIBBERISH. A
GE'CK. n. s. [Sax. geac, a cuckoo; geck, German, a fool; geaf, Scottish.] A bubble easily imposed upon. Hauser.
Obsolete.

Why did you suffer Jachimo to taint his noble heart and brain with needless jealousy, and to become the geck and scorn o' th' other's villainy?

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprinted,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention play'd on?

Shakespeare, Tit. Night.

To GECK.† v. a. [from the noun; or from the Teut. ghecken, to deceive.] To cheat;
to trick.

GECK.† A term used by wagoners to their horses when they would have them go faster. Dr. Johnson.—It is a sort of abbreviation of geho, which seems to be a word of great antiquity in the same sense.

A learned friend, whose communications I have frequently had occasion to acknowledge in the course of this work, says, the exclamation geho, geho, which carmen use to their horses, is probably of great antiquity. It is not peculiar to this country; as I have heard it used in France. In the story of the milkmaid who kicked down her pail, and with all her hopes of getting rich, as related in a very ancient collection of apophthegms, entitled Dialogus, Creuturarium, printed at Gouda, in 1480, is the following passage: Et cum sic glorietur, et cogitaret cum quanta gloria duceretur ad illum virum, super equum dicendo gio, gio, cepit pede percutere terram, quasi pingeret equum calcaribus." Brand, Popular Antiquities.

To GEL.† v. n. [from the old form of go in gie or gee.] To fit; to suit; as, they agree or go together. A northern expression. Wilbraham's Ches. Gloss. and Craven Dial.

GEER.† See GEAR.

GESE. The plural of goose.

GEHE'NNA. n. s. [Gr. γέεννα, from the Hebrew gehinnom, the valley of Hinnom, called also Tophet; old Fr. gehenne, torture, torment, and also hell.] Properly,
a place in a valley where the Israelites erected abominable altars, there sacrificing their children in fire to the idol Moloch; notwithstanding it is usually taken for hell. Bullock.

First, Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with blood

(Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
Though for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard, that pass'd through
fire

To his grim idol — His grove
The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna call'd, the type of hell.
Milton, P. L.

GE'HO.† See GEE.

GELABLE.† adj. [old Fr. gelable, from gelu, Latin.] That may be congealed or concreted into a jelly.

GELATINE.† } adj. [gelatus, Latin. Dr.
GELATINOUS. } Johnson.—Adopted perhaps from the old Fr. gelatine, "an excellent white broth made of the fish saigre." Cotgrave.] Formed into a jelly; viscous; stiff and cohesive.

This pellucid gelatinous substance is an excrement cast off from the shells of fish that inhabit the ocean.

You shall always see their eggs laid carefully up in that spermatick gelatine matter, in which they are deposited. Derham.

To GELD.† v. a. pteer. gelded or gelt;
part. pass. gelded or gelt. [gelten, German; geld-fac, castrated cattle, Iceland.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of the power of generation.

Gold bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall.

Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an enuch. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. To deprive of any essential part.

He bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side,
Gilding the opposed continent as much

The night immediately before he was sighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethiacal epimerisms, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities.

Hawth. Fac. Ferret.

The genethiacal astrologers have other signs, more subtle, though perhaps not much more certain.

Ferrand, Lucé Melanch. p. 149.

GENETHIACKS. n. s. pl. [from γενεθιακή.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

GENETHIATICK. n. s. [γενεθιακή.] One who calculates nativities.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethiacks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person.

Dramatic.

GENÉVA. n. s. [A corruption of genevre, French, a juniper-berry.] We used to keep a distilled spirituous water of juniper in the shops.

At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt and the coarsest spirit.

Hill, Mat. Med.

It is now a common word for the fiery liquid called gin. See Gin.

Gen' him sleep: 'Tis a sign he has ta'en his liquor; and if you meet An officer preaching of sobriety,

Unless he read it in Genes print, Lay him by the heels.

Mozing, Duke of Milan.

GENÉVAINISM. n. s. [from Genève.] Strict Calvinism.

The publick doctrine of the Church of England is not very likely to have been, or to be, upon the party of a faction, that hath so long had a schism on foot against it, to bring in Genéva into church and state wholly, totally, were it possible.

Montaigne, App. to Cesi. p. 72.

GENÉVOIS. n. s. pl. People of Genève; now written Geneve.

The Genévois have been very much refined, or, as others will have it, corrupted by the conversation of the French Protestants.

Addison on Italy.

GENÉIAL. adj. [genial, old Fr. genialis, Latin.]

1. That which contributes to propagation.

Higher of the genial bed by far, And with mysterious reverence I deem.

Milton, P. L.

Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love, The bliss of men below and gods above!

Dryden, Psk.

2. That gives cheerfulness or supports life.

Nor will the light of life continue long, But yields to double darkness night at hand; So much I feel thy genial spirits drop.

Milton, S. A.

3. Natural; native.

It chiefly proceeded from natural incapacity, and genial indisposition. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. Gay; merry.

The celebrated drinking ode of this genial arch-deacon (Walter de Maup) has the regular returns of the monkish rhyme.

Warren, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. ii.

Rp. Hall, Rem. p. 307.

GENIE, n. s. [old Fr. genie.] Inclination; disposition; turn of mind.

Dr. J. Wallis, the keeper of the University registers, &c. did put into the hands of A. Wood the keys of the school-tower, and the key of the room where the said registers, &c. are reposed, in the end that he might advance his genius in antiquities.

Life of A. Wood, p. 147.

GENIO, n. s. [genio, Ital. genius, Lat.] A man of a particular turn of mind.

Some genius are not capable of pure affection; and a man is born with talents for it as much as for poetry, or any other science. Towler.

GENITALS, n. s. Pl. [genitalia, Latin.] Parts belonging to generation.

Hann is conceived to be Jupiter, who was the youngest son, who is said to have cut off the genitals of his father. Brown.

GENETING, n. s. [A corruption of Janetion, French, signifying Jane or Janet, having been so called in honour of some lady of that name; and the Scottish dialect calls them Janet apples, which is the same with Janetion: otherwise supposed to be corrupted from Janetion. Dr. Johnson.—May not the word be just as well supposed to be borrowed from the old French genin, a kind of grape, from which a white wine was made; the apple perhaps resembling it in flavour? See Lacombe and Roq. in V. GENETIN.]

An early apple gathered in June.

In July come early pears and plums in fruit, genietings, and collins. Bacon.

GENITIVE, adj. [genitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the name of a case, which, among other relations, signifies one begetting, as, the father of a son; or one begetting, as, son of a father.

All relatives are said to reciprocate, or mutually infer each other; and therefore they are often expressed by this case, that is to say, the genitive.

Horris, Herm. B. 2. ch. 4.

The relation of possession, or belonging, is often expressed by a case, or different ending of the substantive. The case answers to the genitive case in the Latin, and may still be so called, though perhaps more properly the possessive case.

Leath, Gramm.

GENITOR, n. s. [Latin, genitor; old Fr. geniteur.] A sire; a father.

Profane legends—termed by their genitors and forefathers golden legends.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616.) p. 12.

Whosoever is generative, is from him which is the genitor.

Peerson on the Creed, Art. 1.

GENITURE, n. s. [old Fr. geniture.] Generation; birth.

He had the signifiers in his geniture fortune.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 7.

This work, by merit first of fame secure, Is likewise happy in its geniture;

For, since 'tis born when Charles ascends the throne,

It shares at once his fortune and its own.

Dryden, Ep. to Sir R. Howard.

GENIUS, n. s. [Lat. genie, French. Dr. Johnson has given no instance of the plural number of this word. It is both geni, and geniuses; the former of which belongs to the first definition only; the latter, to any of the rest.]

1. The protecting or ruling power of men, places, or things.

There is none but be Whose being I do fear: and, under him, My genius is rebuk'd; as it is said

Antony was by Cesar. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

And as I awake, sweet music breathe, Sent to some spirit of the wood, Milton, II. Para.

Or th' unseen genius of the wood, Milton, II. Para.

And the tame demon that should guard my throne,

Shrinks at a genius greater than his own. Dryden.

To your glad genius sacrifice this day; Let common guests respectfully give way.

What indeed are the geni of the Arabs, the peris of the Persians, but the elfs and fairies of England? Hale on the Arabian Nights' Ent. p. 15.

2. A man endowed with superior faculties. There is no little writer of Pindarick who is not mentioned as a prodigious genius. Adams.

Among great geniuses, those few draw the admiration of all the world upon them, and stand up as the prodigies of mankind, who by mere strength of natural parts, and without any assistance of art or learning, have produced works that were the delight of their own times, and the wonder of posterity.

Adams, Spect. No. 160.

3. Mental power or faculties. The state and order does proclaim

The genius of that royal dame. Waller.

4. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.

A happy genius is the gift of nature. Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the deal learning of the schools.

Burnet, Theory, Pref.

One science only will one genius fit; So vast is art, so narrow human wit.

Pope on Criticism.

The Romans, though they had no great genius for trade, yet were not entirely neglectful of it.

Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Nature; disposition. Studious to please the genius of the times,

With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes. Dryden.

Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them.

Burnet, Theory, Pref.

He takes the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.

GENOSE, n. s. x. pl. The people of Genoa in Italy.

The Genoses are esteemed extremely cunning, industrious, and insured to hardship above the rest of the Italians.

Addition on Italy.

GENTE, adj. [gent, old French. Dr. Johnson.—This word, in the old romances, is a common epithet applied to ladies.

Chaucer's Sir Thopas, however, is distinguished by the same term, "fair and gent." In this sense, it appears to have been a Provençal word: "Gente, gentile, nobile, grazioso; venuta dal Provenzale." Vocab. Della Crusca.] Elegant; pretty; soft; gentle; polite. A word now disused, Dr. Johnson says; but perhaps transformed, it may be added, into janity.

See JANTY.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage, Forewasted all, till Genusina gen

Pursuaded him to cease. Spranger, F. Q.

She that was noble, wise, as fair and gent, Cast how else might their harmless lives preserve.

Faifus.

GENTE-EL, adj. [gentil, French. Our word was at first gentile. "Other guests, that were bidden, gentilely alleged reasonable impediments." Martin, Mar.

of Priests, 1554. sign. i. l. 1. And this method of writing it continued till about the close of the seventeenth century.

Stillington and Fell both use gentile for gentel.]

Greaves, Muscum.

GENTOO. n. s. [The word Gentoo has been, and is still equally, mistaken to signify, in the proper sense of the term, the professors of the braminiel religion; whereas Gent, or Gentoo, means animal in general, and in its more confined sense, mankind; but is never, in the Sanscrit dialect, nor even in the modern jargon of Bengal, appropriated particularly to such as follow the dictates of Brahmin. The four great tribes have each their own separate appellation; but they have no common or collective term that comprehends the whole nation under the idea affixed by Europeans to the word Gentoo. Possibly the Portuguese, on their first arrival in India, hearing the word frequently in the mouths of the natives as applied to mankind in general, might adopt it for the domestic appellation of the Indians themselves; perhaps also their bigotry might force from the word Gentoo a fanciful allusion to Gentile, a Pagan. Hallied, Code of Gentoo Laws, Pref. p. xxi.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

Since the age of Tamerlane, Mahometanism has been universally the religion of the government of India. The Gentoo, however, are still said to exceed in number the Mahometans in the proportion of ten to one. — The religious creed of the Gentoo is a system of the most barbarous idolatry.

I allude to that most cruel custom, by which the wife of the Gentoo is induced to burn herself on the pile which consumes the ashes of her husband.

Professor White, Sermon. 2.

GENTRY. n. s. [gentle, gentry, from gentle. Dr. Johnson. — It may be from the Lat. gens, gentis, a race, a family. Chaucer, however, uses genteric for gentility.]

1. Birth; condition; rank derived from inheritance.

You are certainly a gentleman, Clerk-like experience'd, which no less adorns Our gentry than our parents' noble name, Io whose success we are gentle.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse.

Silvius.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast.

As to extend your time with us a-while.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GENTLEFLECTION. n. s. [gentleflexion, Fr.; genu and flecto, Lat.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Boots and shoes are so long snouted, that one can hardly kneel in Gentleflexion, where all genuflection and postures of devotion and decency are quite out of use.

Here use all the rights of adoration, genuflections, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted.

Stillingfleet.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.

Boyle.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have no great influence to make men religious, that where any of these, the real, together with the true and genuine effects of them are supposed to be.

Tillotson.

A sudden darkness covers all;
True genuine night: night added to the groves.

Dryden.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyse compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire.

Boyle.

GENUINENESS. n. s. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

To shew how day and night, winter and summer, arise from Copernicus his hypothesis, will not only explain these verses, but exceedingly set out the fitness and genuineness of the hypothesis itself.

Merr, Song of the Soul, (1647), Notes, p. 414.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable.

Boyle.

GENUS. n. s. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as, quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures; so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and latterly, fly.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus.

Horrey on Conspicuous.

GEOCENTRIC. adj. [γῆ and κέντρον; geo-centrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harris.

GEODESIA. n. s. [γῆ and μέτρον; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine of art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plain figures.

Harris.

GEODETIAC. adj. [from geodesia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEODES. n. s. [Greek, γῆ and δῆς, from γῆ, the earth.] Earth-stone.

GEOGRAPHIC. n. s. [γῆ and γράφω; geographic, Fr.] One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers.

Brown.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers.

Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove, And gaze a meet geographer by love.

Tickell.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographie, Fr.; from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; she geographically describes it to him.

Brown on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. s. [γῆ and γράφω; geographie, Fr.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations.

Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account thereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

According to ancient Fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatic, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography.

Johnson on Coar.

GEOLOGY. n. s. [γῆ and λόγος.] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GEOLOGICAL. n. s. [γῆ and λόγος.] A cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GEOMANCY. n. s. [γῆ and μαντία; geomance, French.] This word is used by Chaucer. Sometimes it is written geomancy. "I have seen some notes of his — on Cattan's Geomantie," Aubrey's Lett. and Anec. ii. 473.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.

Aschaff.

He therefore sent out all his senses, To bring him intelligence; Which vulgar, out of ignorance, Mistake for falling in a trance; But those that trade in geomancy, Affirm to be the strength of fancy.

Hudibras.

GEOMANICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd } Above his head, a warrior and a maid; } One when direct, and one when retrograde. } Dryden.

GEOMETRIC. n. s. [γεωμετρικ; geometric, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

The plane of many-sided squares, That want be drawn out by geometers.

Sp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

He discerns presently, by your judgement of algebra, what a geometer you are like to prove.

Watts, Correct. of Hobbis, § 1.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age.

Watts.

GEOMETRAL. adj. [geometral, Fr. from geometria.] Pertaining to geometry. Dict.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [geometrically, Fr. from geometria.] Pertaining to geometry.

GEOMETRICAL. adj. [geometrical, Fr. from geometria.] Pertaining to geometry.

GEOMETRICK. n. s. [geometrick, Fr. from geometria.] Pertaining to geometry.

1. Pertaining to geometry. A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason.

More against Alcibi.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several powers.

Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry. Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the insight and bigness of Hercules by his foot?

Stillingfleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert, That the vast orb, which casts so far his beams, Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?

That the dimensions of his glorious face Two geometrick feet does scarce surpass? Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry. Geometrick jasper seemeth to affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis.

Grew, Muscum.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics.

Ray on the Creation.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. s. [γεωμετρικ.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof.

Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles!

Watts on the Mind.

TO GEOMETRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρίω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtain good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figure, and yet confined herself to geometrical.

Dryden.

GEOMETRY. n. s. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it; but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice.

Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world.

Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain, Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain; Who counts geometry and numbers toys, And with his foot the sacred dust destroys.

Dryden, Pers.

GEOPONICAL. adj. [γῆ and πόνος; geoponique, Fr.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geponical, or such as have treated de re rustica.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GEOPOONICKS. n. s. plural. [γῆ and πόνος.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

The study of geoponics has always been of esteem in the world; and the writings of Virgil, Constantine, Theophrastus, Varro, Columella, and Palladius, as classical learning to us, we have amongst us. Letters (Plat to Charlett), vol. i. p. 73.

Herbs and wholesome sallets, and other plain and useful parts of geoponics. Evelyn, Acet. Del.

GEORGIC. n. s. [Γεωργία, Lat.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my george, I am a gentleman; Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original. Dr. Johnson — Cowel, under pauis militarius, writes, "hard basket, brown george camp bread, coarse and black." Mr. Bagshaw thinks that the figure of St. George might be stamped upon such bread.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid, On a brown george, with lousy swabbers, fed.

Dryden, Pers.

3. GEORGE Noble. A gold coin, current at six shillings and eight pence, in the reign of king Henry VIII.

The gold coins of Henry the Eighth, were sovereigns, half sovereigns, rials, half and quarters, angels, angelets, and quarter angels, groats, half-pence, pence, crowns of the double rose, and half-crowns.

Leake on Eng. Coins.

GEORGICAL. adj. See GEORICK. In the Hist. of the Royal Society, georgical is applied to a list of persons skilled in the doctrine of agriculture, Vol. i. p. 407.

GEORICK. n. s. [γεωργικ; georgique, Fr.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry.

Addison.

Georgicks are books speaking of husbandry and tillage.

Cockeram, and Bullock.

Much less ought the low phrasms and terms of art, that are adapted to husbandry, have any place in such a work as the Georgicks, which is not to appear in the natural simplicity and nakedness of its subject, but in the pleasantest diction that poetry can bestow upon it. Addison on Virgil's Georgicks.

The pleasures of imagination, the essay on the Georgicks, and his [Addison's] last papers in the Spectator and Guardian, and models of language.

GE'ORICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Here I parse the Mantuan georgick strains, And learn the labours of Italian vays.

Gay, Rural Sports.

GEORGIUM SIDUS. n. s. [Latin:] called after his majesty king George III. Of the planets.

The Georgium Sidus is attended by two moons.

Adams.

The Georgium Sidus was discovered by Dr. Herschel in the year 1781.

Ibid.

GE'OSCOPY. n. s. [γῆ and σκοπεῖν, to view.] A kind of knowledge of the nature and qualities of the ground or soil, gained by viewing and considering it. Chambers.

GEOTICK. adj. [from γῆ.] Belonging to the earth: terrestrial. Dict.

GERANIUM. n. s. [geranium, Fr. geranium, Gr. from γῆρας, a crane; the plant is called cranesbill.] Its characters are these: the flower hath a permanent empalement, composed of five small oval leaves, and five oval or heart-shaped petals, spreading open, which are in some species equal, and in others the upper two are much larger than the three lower. It has ten stamina, alternately longer than each other, but shorter than the petals, and terminated by oblong summits. In the bottom of the flower is situated a five-cornered germen, which is permanent. The flower is succeeded by five seeds, each being wrapped up in the husk of the beak, where they are twisted together at the point, so as to form the resemblance of a stork's beak. There are forty-three species. Miller.

GERENT. adj. [gerens, Latin.] Carrying; bearing. Dict.

GERFALCON. n. s. [Germ. geirfalk; low Lat. gyrofalco, from gyrare, to turn round, and falco; so named from the circular flights he makes, as some think; others, from the Germ. gier, a vulture, and falke, a falcon.] A bird of prey, in size between a vulture and a hawk, and of the greatest strength next to the eagle.

You must not hope to find your ger-falcon there, which is the noble hawk.

Sir T. Brown, of Hawks, Miscell. p. 118.

GERKIN. n. s. See GIERKIN.

GERM. n. s. [germe, old Fr. germen, Lat.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germ or treading of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GERMAN. n. s. [germain, French; germanus, Lat.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german, the only sense in which the word is now used.

They knew it was their cousin German, the famous Amphidius.

And to him said, go now, proud miscreant, Thyself thy message do to german dawn.

Spenser, F. Q.

Wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be kill'd by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be sold by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were juries on thy life.

Shakespeare, Zim.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and genets for Germans.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GERMAN. adj. [germanus, Latin.] Related. Obsolete.

Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the langman.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

GERMAN. n. s. [Lat. Germanus, from Germania.]

1. A native of Germany.

German, and Scythians, and Sarmatians, north Beyond Danubius to the Taurick pool.

Milton, P. R.

The bluest honest humour of the Germans sounds better in the raughness of the High Dutch, than it would in a politer tongue.

Addison, Spect.

Father Boubours makes it a question, whether a German can be a wit.

Addison, Freeholder, No. 30.

2. The language of the Germans.

Do you learn German yet, to read, write, and speak it?

Id. Chesterfield.

GERMAN. n. s. [germanus, Latin.] Relating to the customs, language, or people of Germany.

A woman that is like a German clock, Still a repairing; ever out of frame; And never going aright.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab.

GERMANDER. n. s. [germandree, French; Chamædrys, Latin.] A plant.

Little heaps, in the nature of mole-hills, should be set, some with wild thyme, some with pinks, some with germander, that give a good flower to the eye.

Bacon, Ess. of Gardens.

GERMANISM. n. s. [from German.] An idiom of the German language.

It is full of Latinisms, Gallicisms, Germanisms, and all sorts but Anglicisms.

Id. Chesterfield.

Of oysters' germins tumble all together, Even till destruction sicken; answer me To what I ask you.

Id. Shalokio thunder.

Strike that the thick roundness of 't' world; Crack Nature's mould, all germins spill at once That make ungrateful man.

Shakespeare, A. Lear.

GERMINANT. adj. [germinans, Lat.] Sprouting; branching.

Prophecies are not fulfilled punctually, at once, but have springing, and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

To GERMINATE. v. n. [germino, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcies, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chrysalis trials.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth.

Woodward.

To GERMINATE. v. n. To cause to sprout.

The tree of goodness which is set by fear, strengthened by faith, watered by grace, germinated by godliness, will was green by hope, will fructify by love, will build by learning.

Spenser, F. Q.

GERMINATION. n. s. [germination, French, from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally.

Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte nascentes.

Watson.

There is but little similitude between a tedious humidity and plantal germination.

Glanville, Scrup.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination.

Bentley, Serm.

To GERMINATE. See To GERM.

GEROCOMY. n. s. [gerocomie, Fr. from γῆρας, an old man, and κομῆν, to take care of.] That part of medicine, which treats of the proper regimen to be observed in old age.

GEROCOMICAL. adj. Pertaining to that part of medicine, which concerns old age.

It is my earnest desire, that physicians would study the gerocomical part of physic more than they do.

Smith, Fort. of Old Age, (1666), p. 257.

GERSE. n. s. [Teut. gers, gara, gras.] Grass. Craven Dialect.

GERUND. n. s. [gerundium, Lat.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

There be belonging to the infinitive mood of verbs certain vowels called gerunds; which have both the active and passive signification.

The particle with the proposition before it, and still retaining its government, answers to what is called in Latin the gerund.

Lowth.

GE'LING. n. s. In the north of England, a gosling; formed from geese, as the other is from goose.

GEST. n. s. [geste, old French; chanson de geste, chanson historique, dans laquelle on célébrait les hauts faits des guerriers; la geste, l'histoire.] Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom. From the Lat. gesta, res gestæ.]

1. A deed; an action; an achievement.

Who fair them quies, as him beseeched ben, And goodly gain discourse of what a noble ger.

Spenser, F. Q.

You use to sharpen and wet your understanding in the execution of high deeds and gests; in which you have employed much time.

Id. Sonnets, Serm. p. 122.

The Acts of the Apostles, which contain the perogations and gests of St. Paul, are a great manner-key to open his Epistles.

Id. Sonnets, Serm. p. 122.

2. Show; representation.

Gests should be interlarded after the Persian manner, by ages young and old.

Id. Sonnets, Serm. p. 122.

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [Give, Fr. a bed, and lodging place, from the Lat. jacer.]

I'll give you my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the get.

Prefix'd for 's parting. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

1. A stage; so much of a journey as passes without interruption. In all senses obsolete. Hammond writes it gest, in the present sense; if it be not an error of the press.

The constant stage and post in our gests to heaven. Hammond, Works, iv. 485.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof. Brown.

- GESTATION.† n. s. [gestatio, Latin.]
Our word is pronounced unusual and uncouth by Heylin, in 1656. Yet it appears in the vocabulary of Cockeram, many years before that date, with the general sense of "a bearing, a carrying." The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

- GESTATORY.* adj. [Lat. gestatorius.] Capable of being worn or carried.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they wore about their heads and necks, &c.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 90.

- GE'STICK.* adj. [from gest.] Legendary; historical.

Dames of ancient days

Have led their children through the miryful maze;
And the grey grandaunt, skill'd in gestick lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

Goldsmith, Traveller.

- To GESTICULATE.† v. n. [gesticulator, Latin; gesticular, Fr.] To play antic tricks; to sliew postures. Dict.

Their bands, eyes, gesticulating severally, and after each other; swarming round, and now and then conforming themselves to a Donick silliness. Dr. Herbert, Tron. p. 305.

They [the Spaniards] talk loudly, and argue with more vehemence than even the French or Italians, and gesticulate with equal if not superior eagerness.

Swinburne, Tour through Spain, Let. 42.

- To GESTICULATE.* v. a. To act; to imitate.

If I knew any man so vile

To act the crimes these whippers reprehend,
Or what their virile apes gesticulate,
I should not then much muse their shreds were lik'd. B. Jonson, Apol. Dialogue.

- GESTICULATION.† n. s. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, Fr. from gesticulate.]
Antick tricks; various postures.

The wanton gesticulations of a virgin, in a wild assembly of gallants warned with wine, could be no other than rigid and unbecomingly.

Sp. Hall, Contempt. B. 4.

They leap forth below, a mistress leading them; and with antic gesticulation and action, after the manner of the old pantomime, they dance over a distracted comedy of love, expressing their confused affections, in the scenical persons and habits of the four European nations. E. Jonson, Masquer.

Minimil and fantastical gesticulations.

Dr. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 29.

- GESTICULATOR.* n. s. [Lat. gesticulator.]

One that shews postures or tricks.

If King Alfred really went into the Danish camp as a spy, he took upon him the character of a mimic, a dancer, a gesticulator, a jack-pudding.

Page.

- GESTICULATORY.* adj. [from gesticulate.]

Representing in an antick manner.

No bishop shall permit plays or sports, undoubtedly mimical and gesticulatory entertainments, to be exhibited in his presence.

- GE'STOUR.* n. s. [from gest.] A narrator.

Obsolete.

Gestours for to tellen tales.

Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

The proper business of a gestour was to recite tales or gests; which was only one of the branches of the minstrel's profession. Tyrwhitt on Chaucer.

- GE'STURE. n. s. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, Fr.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Shakspeare.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we sit down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

Humble and reverent gestures in our approaches

To God express the inward reverence of our souls.

Whole Duty of Man.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,

In every gesture dignity and love! Milton, P. L.

Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gestures, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive.

Addison, Spect.

- To (GE'STURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disagreeeth it; it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. Hooker.

He undertook to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, so the duke's manner was, that none should discern him.

Watson.

- To GE'T.† v. a. pret. I got, anciently get part. pass. got, or gotten, and anciently get. [Sax. zecan, zentan; Norm. Fr. get, hath begotten. Kelham.]

1. To procure; to obtain.

Thine be the conquest, well hast thou it got.

Spenker, Shig. Ctd.

Of that which was our father's had he gotten all his glory. Gen. xxxi. 1.

We got our bread with the peril of our lives.

Lam. v. 9.

David got him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians.

2 Sam. vii. 13.

Most of these things might be more exactly tried by the Torricellian experiments, if we could get tubes so accurately blown that the cavity were perfectly cylindrical.

Boyle.

Such a conscience, as has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the utmost and circumscribed information about the will of God, that its power, advantages, and opportunities could afford it, is that great internal judge, whose absolution is a rational and sure ground of confidence.

South.

He insensibly got a facility, without perceiving how; and that is attributed wholly to nature, which was much more the effect of use and practice.

Locke.

The man who lives upon aims, gets him his set of admirers, and delights in superiority.

Addison, Spect.

Sphinx was a monster that would eat

Whatever stranger she could get,

Unless his ready wit discom'd it.

The subtle riddle she propos'd.

Addison, Whig Examiner.

This practice is to be used at first, in order to get a fixed habit of attention, and in some cases only.

The word get is variously used: we say to get money, to get in, to get off, to get ready, to get a stomach, and to get a cold.

Watts, Logick.

2. To force; to seize.

Such lovels and scatterings cannot easily, by any constable, or other ordinary officer, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenker on Ireland.

The king seeing this, started from where he sat, Out from his trembling hand his weapon got.

Doniel.

All things, but one, you can restore;

The heart you got returns no more.

Waller.

3. To win by contest.

Henry the sixth hath lost

All that which Henry the fifth had gotten.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He got his people great honour, and he made battles, protecting the host with his sword.

Mal. iii. 2.

To get the day of them of his own nation, would be a most unhappy day for him.

2 Mac. v. 6.

Aurist held that course to have drawn the gales with his great ships, who thundering amongst them with their great ordnance, might have opened a way into his gallees to have gotten a victory.

Knollys, Hist. of the Turks.

4. To have possession of; to have. This sense is commonly in the compound preterite.

Then facing thee, by fire he made thee bright;

Nay, thou hast got the life of man.

Herbert.

5. To beget upon a female.

These boys are boys of us; they'll none of us; sure they are bastards to the English, the French never got them.

Shakspeare.

Women with study's arts they vex:

Ye gods destroy that impious sex;

And if there must be some 't invoke

Your pow'r's, and make your altars smoke,

Come down yourselves, and, in their place,

Get a more just and noble race.

Waller.

Children they got on their female captives. Locke.

If you'll take 'em as their fathers got 'em, so and well; if not, you must stay till they get a better generation.

Dryden.

Has no shan, but who has kill'd?

A father, right to get a child?

Prior.

Let every married man, that's grave and wise,

Take a tartuff of known affinity;

Who shall so settle lasting reformation;

First get a son, then give him education.

Denham.

The gods of day, descending from above,

Mixt with the day, and get the queen of love.

Granville.

6. To gain as profit.

Though creditors will lose one-fifth of their principal and use, and landlords one-fifth of their income, yet the debtors and tenants will not get it.

Locke.

7. To gain a superiority or advantage.

If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them like a rob of steel.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

8. To earn; to gain by labour.

Having no riches, nor any other way of getting or keeping of riches, but by trade, so much of our trade as is lost, so much of our riches must necessarily go with it.

Locke.

If it be so much pains to count the money I would spend, what labour did it cost my ancestors to get it? Locke.

9. To receive as a price or reward.

Any tax laid on foreign commodities in England raises their price, and makes the importer get more for them; but a tax laid on your home-made commodities lessens their price. Locke.

10. To learn.

This defect he frequently lamented, it being harder with him to get one sermon by heart than to pen twenty. Fell.
Get by heart the more common and useful words out of some judicious vocabulary. Watts.

By the marriage of his grandson Ferdinand he got into his family the kingdoms of Bohemia and Hungary. Addison.

After having got out of you every thing you can spare, I scorn to trespass. Guardian.

15. To betake; to remove; implying haste or danger.

Get you to-bed on th' instant; I will be return'd forthwith. Shakespeare, Othello.
Aries, get thee out from this land. Gen. xxxi. 13.

Let them join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land. Ex. i. 10.

He with all speed got himself with his followers to the strong town of Mega. Kneller, Hist.

16. To remove by force or art.

She was quickly got off the land again. Kneller.
The roving fumes of quicksilver, in evaporating, would oftentimes fasten upon the gold in such plenty, as would put him to much trouble to get them off from his rings. Boyle.

When mercury is got by the help of the fire out of a metal, or other mineral body, we may suppose this quicksilver to have been a perfect body of its own kind. Boyle.

They would be glad to get out those which their own hands have planted, and which now have taken too deep root to be easily extirpated. Locke on Education.

17. To put.

Get on thy boots; we'll ride all night. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

18. To GET off. To sell or dispose of by some expedient.

Wood, to get his halfpence off, offered an hundred pounds in his coin for seventy in silver. Swift.

19. To GET over. To conquer; to suppress; to pass without being stopped in thinking or acting. Dr. Johnson makes this sense neuter.

'Tis very pleasant to hear the lady propose her doubts, and to see the pains he is at to get over them. Addison.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy for perpetually railing their wormen. Swift.

To remove this difficulty, Peterborough was dispatched to Vienna, and got over some of those disputes. Swift.

20. To GET up. To prepare; to make fit. A colloquial expression: as, the entertainment was got up at a great expense.

To GET. C. N.

1. To arrive at any state or posture by degrees with some kind of labour, effort, or difficulty: used either of persons or things.

Phalanx was entrapp'd, and saw round about him, but could not get out. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

You knew he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge. More likely to fall in than to get o'er. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The stranger shall get up above thee very high, and thou shalt come down very low. Deut. xxviii. 43.

Those that are very cold, and especially in their feet, cannot get to sleep. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I utterly condemn the practice of the later times, that some who are pricked for sheriffs, and were fit, should get out of the bill. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

He got away into the Christians, and hardly escaped. Kneller.

He would be at their backs before they could get out of Armenia. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

She plays with his rage, and gets above his anger. Deborah.

The latent air is got away in bubbles. Boyle.
There are few bodies whose minute parts stick so close together, but that it is possible to meet with some other body whose small parts may get between, and so disjoint them. Boyle.

There was but an insensible diminution of the liquor upon the recess of whatever it was that got through the cork. Boyle.

Although the universe, and every part thereof, are objects full of excellency, yet the multiplicity thereof is so various, that the understanding falls under a kind of despondency of getting through so great a task. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

If there should be any leak at the bottom of the vessel, yet very little water would get in, because no air could get out. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

O heav'n, in what a labyrinth am I led! I could get out, but she detains the thread! Dryden.

So have I seen some fearful haw maintain A course, till tir'd before the dog she lay; Who, stretch'd behind her, pants upon the plain, Past pow'r to kill, as she got away. Dryden, Ann. Mirak.

The more oily and light part of this mass would get above the other, and swim upon it. Burnet, Theory.

Having got through the foregoing passage, let us go on to his next argument. Locke.

The removing of the pains we feel is the getting out of misery, and consequently the first thing to be done, in order to happiness, absent good.

If, having got into the sense of the epistles, we will but compare what he says, in the places where he treats of the same subject, we can hardly be mistaken in his sense. Locke.

I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me. Tatler.

Bucephalus would let nobody get upon his back but Alexander the Great. Addison on Italy.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent, Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent; Eating their way, and undermining all, Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. Addison.

When Alma noon, in diff'rent ages, Has finish'd her ascending stages, Into the head at length she gets, And there in publick grandeur sits, To judge of things. Prior.

I resolved to break through all measures to get away. Swift.

2. To fall; to come by accident.

Two or three men of the town are get among them. Tatler.

3. To find the way; to insinuate itself.

When an egg is made hard by boiling, since there is nothing that appears to get in at the shell, unless some little particles of the water, it is not easy to discover from whence else this change proceeds than from a change made in the texture of the parts. Boyle.

He raves; his words are loose As leaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense: So high he's mounted in his airy hopes, That now the wind is got into his head, And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryden, Spem. Franc.

A child runs to overtake and get up to the top of his shaver, which still advances at the same rate that he does. Locke.

Should dressing, fawning, and balls one get among the Cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost. Addison.

The fluids which surround bodies, upon the surface of the globe, get to between the surfaces of bodies when they are at any distance. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

4. To move; to remove.

Get home with thy fewel made ready to set; The sootier, and easier carriage to get. Tuxen.

5. To have recourse to.

The Turks made great haste through the midst of the town ditch, to get up into the bulwark to help their fellows. Kneller.

Lying is so cheap a cover for any miscarriage, and so much in fashion, that a child can scarce be kept from getting into it. Locke.

6. To go; to repair.

They ran to their weapons, and furiously assailed the Turks, now fearing no such matter, and were not as yet all got into the castle. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

A knot of ladies, got together by themselves, is a very school of impertinence. Swift.

7. To put one's self in any state.

They might get over the river Avon at Stratford, and get between the king and Worcester. Clerendon.

We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to have them; nor, if we had them, how to get quit of them. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Without his assistance we can no more get quit of our affliction, than but by his permission we should have fallen into it. Wade, Prep. for Death.
There is a sort of men who pretend to direct themselves of partiality on both sides, and to get above that imperfect idea of their subject which little writers fall into. Pope on Homer.

As the obtaining the love of the virtuous is the happiest end of life, so the next felicity is in get rid of fools and scoundrels. Pope to Swift.

12. To GET up. To rise from a seat.

13. To remove from a place.

Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Numb. xvi.

14. To get, in all its significations, both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means; except in the use of the preterite compound, which often implies mere possession, as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses it. So we say the lady has got black eyes, merely meaning that she has them.

GETTER. n. s. [from get.]

1. One who procures or obtains.

Them that ought to have been the most comfortors of the poor, those have we seen in be the most greedy getters and purveyors for their misbegotten heirs. Martin, Murr. of Priests, (1554), sign. B. b. 4.

2. One who begets on a female.

Peace is a very lethargy, a getter of more bastard-children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakespeare, Coriol.

GETTING. n. s. [from get.]

1. Act of getting; acquisition.

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. Prov. iv. 7.

2. Gain; profit.

Who hath a state to repair may not desire small things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. Bacon.

The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.

GE'WGAW. n. s. [gezax, Saxon; joyau, French. Dr. Johnson.—What we write gewgaw is written, in the Anglo-Saxon, gezax. It is the past participle of the verb gezaxan; and means any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one. Instead of gewgawes it is sometimes written gigawes and gewaundes. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. of Parley, ii. 266.—I have given the whole of Mr. Tooke's assertion, which he applies equally to gaud, that I might not be thought to misrepresent his meaning. But neither gaud, nor gewgaw, seems to have any connection with the Saxon verb to give. See GAUD. Is it necessary that a trifle, a bauble, must be that which is given away? Surely the Saxon gezax is not thus to be explained; though that word is certainly used for trifles. See Manning's edit. of Lye, where, under that word, gezaxpæc is also cited in the sense of trifling, unprofitable, or low discourse; and under gezax, which is base, low, &c. gezaxpæc occurs with the same meaning, and with that also of derision. We may deduce gezax therefore from zap, and thus account for trifles being named gezax. But as to the termination of gewgaw being sometimes gewgaud, that only serves more strongly to shew that give has nothing to do with the word. Nor may the French gaude, or the northern word for a trifle, be here overpassed. The Icel. gaud, Seneius says, was the name of a pagan deity, which, after the introduction of Christianity, came to signify among them, things of no value; whence godit, puppets, the play-things of little girls. One is tempted almost to pronounce the word formed of gild and gaud. Cotgrave, under babole, writes it guigaw; Skelton, gigaw; and Beaumont and Fletcher once, gewgaud. At other times gewgaw; and once, with an accompaniment not unfavourable to gild and gaud. [Gewgaws and gilded puppets. Four Plays in One.] A shewy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.

It is for children to cry for the falling of their house of cards, or the miscarriage of that painted gewgaw, which the next shower would have defaced. Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 5.

That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring. Abbot, Discov. of the World.

Profer that which providence has pronounced to be the stuff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it. L'Estrange.

As children, when they throw one toy away, Straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.

A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread About his temples, drown'd his narrow head, And would have crush'd it. Dryden, Jan.

Some loose the bands, Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws For gawgawery and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.

The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a topsoph. Aldrich, Guardian.

GE'WGAW. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Felician. Law, Serious Call.

GHA'STFUL. adj. [zar, and galle, Sax.]

1. Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits.

Here will I dwell apart, In ghastral grove therefore, till my last sleep Do close mine eyes; — Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound Is sign of dreary death. Spenker, Ship. Cal.

2. Dreadful; frightful.

I tell ye lie, so ghastral grew my name, That's alone discomfited an host. Mrs. for May, p. 315.

GHA'STULLY.* adj. [from ghastral.] Frightfully.

He often stares ghastral, raves aloud, &c. Pope, Narrative of Dr. R. Norris.

GHA'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghastral.] Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY. adj. [zar, or ghost, and like.]

1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day? — O, I have past a miserable night, So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams, So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Early quickly discovered in court Soliman's changed countenance upon the great basins, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Kneller, Hist. of the Turks.

Death

Grief's horrible a ghastly smile, to bear His famine should be fill'd. Milton, P. L.

Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigure'd by all the ghastly horrors of death, were still seen assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hal-lalululs of thrones, principalitys, and powers. Boyle.

He came, but with such alter'd looks, So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him, All pale and speechless. Dryden, Span. Friar.

I did not for these ghastly visions vend;

Their sudden coming does me ill portend. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.

To be less than gods Didst not; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their sight, Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milton, P. L.

I who make the triumph of to-day, May of to-morrow's pump one part appear, Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on a bier! Prior.

GHA'STNESS. n. s. [from zar, Saxon.]

Ghastliness; horror of look. Not used.

Look you pale, mistress? Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye? Shakespeare, Othello.

GHE'RKIN. n. s. [from gurche, German, a cucumber.] A small pickled cucumber. Skinner.

To GHESS. v. n. [See To GUESS. *Ghe*ss is by critics considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed. Dr. Johnson.—It has prevailed indeed; but ghess is the word in our old lexicography, and is also used by Spenser. See Sherwood's Dict. To GHESE.] To conjecture.

In such luxurious plenitude of all pleasure, It seem'd a second paradise I ghesse. Spenker, P. Q. iv. c. 23.

GHOST. n. s. [zar, Saxon.]

1. The soul of man.

Yes not his ghost? O, let him pass! He hailes him, That would upon the rack of this rough world Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Often did I strive To yield the ghast; but still the evasive frown Kept in my soul. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Where the bodies of the dead have been out of the reach of their surviving enemies, they have thought it highly obnoxious to their ghosts, to take their representations preserved in their pictures and affix them to the cross. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. A spirit appearing after death.

The mighty ghosts of our great Harry rose, And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes, To see this fleet among unequal foes, By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.

Men dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man perish up the ghost. Job, xiv, 10.

Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our sorry lives ready to give up the ghost.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.

I believe in the Holy Ghost. Apostles' Creed.
The name of ghost or gast in the ancient Saxon language signifieth a spirit; and, in that appellation of the Spirit of God, his [the Holy Ghost's] nature principally is expressed.

Perron on the Croast, Art. 8.

To GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.
Eurypylus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted. Sidney.

To GHOST.† v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.

Julius Cæsar

Who at Philipp's the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Ask not with him in the poet "Larve hunc isopetris lœnissimus agens!" "what madnesse ghosts this old man, but what madnesse ghosts him all." Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GHO'STLESS.* adj. [ghost and less.] Without spirit; without life.

Works are the breath of faith; the proofs by which we may judge, whether it live. If you feel them not, the faith is ghostless.

Dr. R. Clarke, Serm. (1637, p. 473.)

GHO'STLIKE.* adj. [ghost and like.] Withered; having hollow, sad, or sunk-in eyes; wild-looking; ghastly; ghost-like. Sherwood, and Cotgrave in F. Hæc.

GHO'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.

GHO'STLY.† adj. [from ghost.]

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Save and defend us from our ghostly enemies.

Common Prayer.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so rarely known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid.

Hooker.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feelth.

Hooker.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians.

King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The ghostly father now hath done his thrift.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Relating to apparitions of departed men.

To muse at last, amid the ghostly gloom
Of graves and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells;
To walk with spectres through the midnight shade.

Alexander, Pleas. of Image, B. I.

GIAL'ALINA. n. s. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters. Woodward, Met. For.

VOL. II.

GI'ANBREK. n. s. [Jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adorn their gienbrek falls.

Spenser, F. Q.

GI'ANT.† n. s. [geant, French; ogant, Saxon; gigant was also our own word in the sixteenth century; gigas, Latin. Anciently also our word was geant; as in the poetry of Gower.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness. Several of the ancients translate the Hebrew word niphlim, Gen. vi. 4. (giants) by giants, violent men, who carried all before them by main force; who filled the world with rapines, and murders, and all manner of wickedness. Sp. Patrick.

Now does he feel his ale
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe,
Upon a dwarfish thief.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold empire!

Milton, P. L.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time.

Religio, Hæc.

The giant's brothers, in their camp, have feard
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground.

Dryden, Æn.

By weary steps and slow
The groping giant with a trunk of pine
Exploit'd his way.

Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,
Afflicts the chief to avenge his giant-son,
Great Polyphemus of more than mortal might.

Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. s. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteess, and lie under mount Pelion.

I wad this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteess.

Hovell.

To GI'ANTIZE.* v. n. [old Fr. geantier.] To play the giant.

Sherwood.

GI'ANTLIKE.† adj. [from giant and like.] GI'ANTLY. Gigantick; vast; bulky.

That proud Philistia — his giantly strength and stature. Dr. Hall, Cures of Conscience.

'Tis giant-like ambition.

Benson, and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

Single courage has often, without resource,
overcome giantly difficulties. Ducay of Pity.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to,
and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their eyes, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field.

Sout.

GI'ANTRY.* n. s. [old Fr. geanterie.] The race of giants. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. s. [from giant-.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest fallen,
Stalking with less unconcomable strides,
And lower looks. Milton, S. A.

GIB.† n. s. Any old worn-out animal. Dr.
Johnson says, from Sir Thomas Hammet, citing only the passage from Hamlet.
It means a cat; and was a word of contempt in our old authors.

She is a tomcatish goby.

The devil and she be sb. Shelton's Poems, p. 126.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a hut, a gib,
Such dear conceivings hide? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

And call me beldam, gib, witch, night mare, trot,
Dragon, Epist. of El. Coburn to D. Humphrey.

To GIB.* v. n. To act like a cat.

What caterwauling's here? what gibbing?
Benson, and Fl. Wildgoose Chase.

GI'BERD.* adj. [from gibber.] Having been caterwauling. See GIBCAT.

They have remained somewhat giberd, like gib'd cats. Dalrymple, Arct. Changing.

As melancholy as a gib'd cat. Ray's Proverbs.

To GI'BERB. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticularly.

The shewed dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GI'BERISH.† n. s. [Derived by Skinner from gabber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber.] But, as it was anciently written giberish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe. Dr. Johnson.—The manner of writing this word giberish or giberish, is found in Camden: "it would seem most strange and harsh Dutch, or GERISH, as women call it!" Rem. on Languages.
ed. 1674, p. 30. This observation of Camden will hardly favour the chymical etymon. There is another variation, that of giberidge, or gibbridge, which is in the old dictionary of Sherwood, and in the Satires of Marston, 1599. This also is unfriendly to Geber and his tribe:
and the oldest method of writing the word, which is giberish, and not giberish, will hardly be thought to be on their side. See the first of the examples. It means originally, perhaps, the gabble of the schoolmen; a "scholastick giberish," as Goodman writes, Wint. Ev. Conf. P.
iii. Moreover, see Lye, edit. Manning.
Labban, to deride, to mock, whence perhaps our gabble and giberish. Thus Dr. Jamieson considers our word to be from gabber or jabber, whence gibber, and so giberish, if not rather from the Teut. gaberadic, trifles. But see Tu
GAB and TU GABERK. Sørenius also thinks our giberish to be synonymous with gibe, a mock or joke. Bullokar presents us with another substantive formed from it, viz. giberishness, which he calls
"any kind of mad, broken, fustian language, gibble-gabble, canting, &c." edit.
1656. The word has been formed both into a verb, and an adjective, which has escaped the notice of all our lexicographers.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gypsies; words without meaning.

What! methynke ye be clerkyshe,
For ye speake good gibberish.

Interlude of Youth, 1557.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very casual and significant, cry out straitway, that we speak no English, but gibberish.

Epistle prefixed to Spenser's Shep. Cal.
Speaking gibberish, or pedlars' French, rather than Latin, or any other common language.

Favours, Arctis, new Novels, (1615), p. 407.
A senseless gibberish, or a fustian language.

Rp. Hamlet against Hobbes, p. 20.
Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had written sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian.

GIBBERISH, n. s. [Canting; unintelligible; fustian.]

A company of gibberish phrases.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1615), p. 177.
Some contending for privileges, customs, forms, and that old entanglement of inquiry their gibberish laws, though the badge of their ancient slavery. Milton, Truce of Kings and Magistrates.
To GIBBERISH, v. n. To prate idly or unintelligibly.

You understand not the state of "limbus patrum," nor the depth of the question, but scum [skin] upon the surface, and gibberish you would tell for what. Montaigne, Ap. to Cæsar, (1625), p. 248.

GIBBET, n. s. [gibet, French.]
1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcasses are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at naught?

Dryden.

You scandal to the stock of verse, a ruse
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Clovenail.
Hanna suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another.

Papers lay such principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next business should be to erect gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any traverse beam.

To GIBBET, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To hang or expose on a gibbet.

I'll gibbet up his name. Oldham.

2. To hang on any thing hung traverse; as the beam of a gibbet.

He shall come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket. Shaks. Hen. IV.
GIBBIER, n. s. [French.] Game; wild fowl.

These lapdogs are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax-free. Addition on Italy.

GIBBLE-GABBLE, n. s. [from gibble.]
Any rude or noisy conversation; fustian language; barbarous speech.

Shewwood, and Cotgrave in V. Barragouin.

Mad, broken, fustian language; gibble-gabble; canting; or such private-made words as beggars, gipsies, and such confederate rogues use one another. Bulwer.

GIBBOSITY, n. s. [gibbosité, French, from gibbosus.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

This way of description renders the face of the earth upon a plane in its own proper figure spherically, as upon the globe itself; the gibbosity only allowed for. Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 305.

When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Bay.

GIBBOUS, adj. [gibbeus, French; gibbosus, Latin, from the Hebrew gib, prominent, eminent.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member.

A pointed finny rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.

Dryden.
The sea, by this access and recess, shutting the empty shells, wears away time, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat.

Woodward, Not. Hist.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How came, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed? Brown.

GIBBOUSNESS, n. s. [from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence.

To make this convexity of the earth discernible to the eye, suppose a man to be lifted up a great height in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon under one view; but then, again, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat. Hentley, Sermon.

GIBCAT, n. s. [gib and cat.] A cat.

See GIBBED.

I am as unelancholy as a gibbet, or a lugg'd bear. Shakspeare.

To GIBE, v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censurousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker.

When we saw thy toy, and gibe, and greet,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-making,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a giding spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose glee
Which shallow laughing beavers give to fools. Shakspeare.

Thus with talents well enlaid
To be scurrilous and rude,

When you perily raise your snout,
Fleece and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE, v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting to Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my misive out of audience.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Draw the beams as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE, n. s. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the flocks, the gibes and notable scorns
That dwell in every region of his face.

Shakspeare, Othello.
The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor.

Dryden, Jan.
If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spektator.

But the deen, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers. Swift.

GIBER, n. s. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary benefactor of the capital. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He is a giber, and our present business is of more serious consequence.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

GIBELINES, n. s. pl. The name of a faction in Italy, opposed to that of the Guelphs, in the thirteenth century. The reason of these names has been variously attempted to be explained.

Not content with endless quarrels,
Against the wicked and their morals,
The Gibelins, for want of Guelphs,
Direct their rage upon themselves. Hudibras, iii. 2.

This would destroy all the records in the Tower, and Magna Charta, and the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, and divide the whole kingdom into Guelphs and Gibelins.

Rp. Parker, Rep. of Relicars. Translated, p. 205.

GIBINGLY, adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibbing and ungraciously he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

GIBLET, n. s. [According to Minshew, from gibbet, gibel; according to Junius, more probably from gibbet, ganc, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—The word is the old French, gibet, gibelet, gibet, &c. i. e. gibet; Latin, caberium, Food. V. Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom.] The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for uncouth delicacies, kills thousands of creatures but for their tongues or giblets. Rp. Hall, St. Paul's, Constat.

I shall not like the table of a country justice, bespoken over with all manner of cheap salads, sliced beef, giblets, and petticoats, to fill up room.

Brown, and Fl. Warton-Hatier.

'Tis holiday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who judges me my meat?
That he may roll at ease; and praiser'd high,
When I am laid, my feet on giblet pie?

Dryden, Pers.

GIBTAEFF, n. s.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage. Dict.

GIDDLILY, adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam
Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become. Denon.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune.

Shakspeare, Tim. Night.

GIDDINESS, n. s. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Magrims and giddiness are rather when we risk after long sitting, than while we sit.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it.

Holoday.
Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
Begio with giddiness, and end in pain.

Young.
2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability;
changeableness.

There be delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief.

Bacon.
3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indigestion of Heaven rolling and turning us, till at length such a giddiness mixed upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of securies.

South.
4. Frolic; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent,
Charitably war'd of thy sins, dost repent,
Those vanities and giddinesses.

Donne.
GIDDY. adj. [gib, Saxon.] I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Then rev'ling thus the Teutylus invade,
By giddy heads, and staggering legs betray'd.

Tate, Jan.
2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill.

Pope.
3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; change-ful.

Our fancies are more giddy and uniform,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and woo,
Than women's are. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
It may be goats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have.

Bacon.
Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait.

Dryden, Fab.
The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With noise say nothing, and in parts divide.

Dryden, Ru.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always lived a domestic life.

Swift to Gay.
4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dangerous flood.

Prior
The vapors through mystic mazes guide their way.

Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy, foolish hours are gone,
And in fantastic measures danc'd away.

Rose, Jane Shore.
How forcible are these giddy creatures, who,
in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed.

Richardson, Clarissa.
6. Tottering; unfix'd.

As we have pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the batches,
Methought that Giv'ner stumbled.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering inticement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakespeare.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;

Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gaining still in doubt,

Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shak.
To GIDDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodine North-wind fetcht,
With an extreme sea, quite about againe,

Our whole rowdours; and our course constrain
To giddy round. Chapman.

To GIDDY. v. a. To make giddy; to render unsteady.

He is a quiet and peaceable man, who is not moved when all things else are; not shaken with fear, not giddied with suspicion.

Paradise, Sermon. (1657.) p. 423.

GIDDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.]
Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you sonecary, useless, giddybrained d'ee! Grave, Pen. Port.

GIDDYHEADED. n. s. [giddy and head.] One without due thought or judgement.

A company of giddyheads will take upon them to define how many shall be saved, and who damned to a parish; where they shall sit in beaven; interpret apocalypses; and precisely set down when the world shall come to an end, what year, what month, what day.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 677.

GIDDY-HEADED. adj. [giddy and head.]
Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heaven's scheme decry

What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddyheaded antick youth will wear. Jonson.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddyheaded, hear the testimony of Solomon.

Burton on Melancholy.

GIDDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.]
Moving without regularity.

Of these most brisk and giddypaced times.

Shakespeare.

To GIVE. v. a. [the parent of our word guide; perhaps from the old Fr.
guier, to conduct. See To GUIDE.] To direct; to guide. Obsolete.

And if that ye in cleare love me give,
He will you love as me, for your cleanness,

And shew to you his joye and his brightness.

Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

GIVE-EAGLE. n. s. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the give-eagle. Lev. xi. 18.

GIERFALCON. See GERFALCON.

GIF. conj. [Sax. gif, if; Goth. gar, q. d. gav, the same.] If. The word is used in the north of England. See If.

Of any good knight will fend this dame,
Come forth, or else must die.

Ballad of Sir Amour, Percy's Rel. ii. 1. 9.

GIFT. n. s. [Sax. gifu.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. St. Mat. ii. 11.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. The act of giving.

God also bestowing them witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts [in the margin, distributions,] of the Holy Ghost. Heb. ii. 4.

Creator bounteous and benign
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts, nor everest. Milton, P. L.

These all things living gaze on, all things shine
By gift. Milton, P. L.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Milton, P. L.

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts to their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven. Tob. xiii. 11.

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise. Deut. xvi. 19.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shaks.

She was lovely to attract
Tire love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd.
Unseemly to bear rule. Milton, P. L.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talents. Adams.

To GIFT. v. a. To endow with any faculty or power.

Am I better gifted than another? Thou art an ill judge of either, who enviest the gifts of both.

Sp. Hall, Swan's Fairy Darts quoted, § 9.

In those primitive times there were no women extraordinarily gifted by God's Spirit, who took upon them to preach and pray publicly.

Sp. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

If he be gifted with abilities of mind, that may raise him such an undertaking.

Milton, Disc. and Disc. of Divorce.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence,
to those who have it not under command; women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory.

Addison, Freeholder.

GIFTED. adj. [In this form Dr. Johnson gives the word. But see To GIFT.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brass fetters, under gaze.

With my heaven-gifted strength. Milton, S. A.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers.

It is commonly used ironically, Dr.
Johnson says; which is not the fact.

See To GIFT, and the examples under
it.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hackett and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart and harangued
the people to dispose them to an insurrection.

Dryden.

GIFTEDNESS. n. s. [from gifted, in its original sense.] The state of being endowed with extraordinary powers.

May not a conformist, though of an ordinary invention, and not endued with the sublimest giftedness of our separatists, say, Seek, seek, seek,
or Good, good, good, &c.

Richards, Grounds of Cont. of the Cler. p. 130.

GIG-? n. s. [etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, rigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

Milton, P. L.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills.

He hath two gill-fins; out behind the gills, and in most fishes, but before them.

Waller.

Till they, of farther passage quick bereft, Were in the mesh with gills entang'd left.

King, Fishermen.

2. The flaps that hang below the neck of a bowl.

The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the her both less.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The flesh under the chin.

So many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont.

Swift.

4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin; jail, old French.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint; or, in some places, half a pint.

Every bottle must be finced with wine; some, out of mistaken thrift, will rince a dozen with the same; change the wine at every second bottle; a gill may be enough.

Swift.

5. A kind of measure among the tinners.

They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint.

Carew.

6. [From Gillian, the old English way of writing Judian, or Julian.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Ben Jonson. It seems to have been rather a contemptuous name, denoting a wanton; and may be from the Sax.

gæxl, gæl, lascivious, wanton; and such a woman is called, in our old lexicography, a gill-flirt. See Sherwood in GILL. Mr. Stevens has strangely imagined this word to be from gill-flower.

The wife that gods not giglot wise With every flirring gill,

But honestly doth keep at home, Not set to gossip still.

P. of Bullinger's Serm. (1576.) p. 294.

Scurry knave! I am none of thy gilt.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

You heard him take me up like a gilt-shirt.

Ben Jonson, and Fl. An. of the Burn. Fest.

I can, for I will,

Here at Burley o' th' Hill,

Give you all your fill,

Each Jack with his Gilt.

B. Jonson, Cyprian.

7. [Chelidonium]. The name of a plant; ground-ivy.

The lowly gilt, that never dares to climb.

Shakespeare, Schoolmaster.

8. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

9. A fissure in a hill. [Icel. gild, a cleft, a rift of mountains; whence, any fissure.]

The canary birds, which they bring to us in England, breed in the "tarances," or gilds, which the water huts fretted away in the mountains, betwixt places very cold.

Relation of Tournefort, in Syon's Hist. R. S. p. 306.

10. In the north of England, a place hemmed in with two steep brows or banks, a rivulet running between them. Ray.

You may continue along this gilt, and passing by one of the village and its church for half a mile, it leads to an opening between two hills covered with fir woods.

Gray, Letters.

11. In some parts of the south of England, a rivulet or brook.

Grove.

A'LLHOUSE. n. s. [gill and house.]

A house where gill is sold.

Three shall each alehouse, three each gillhouse mourn,

And answering ginsbops' sourer sighs return.

Pope.

GILLIAN. n. s. See the sixth meaning of GILL. A wanton.

Thou tookst one up at every word I spoke,

As I had been a markin', a flirt gillian.

Ben Jonson, and Fl. The Chances.

GILLYFLOWER. n. s. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, Fr. Gaven Douglas writes the word jere-flour; and our old lexicographers, Huolett and Barret, gilever and gilefer. I think I have somewhere seen it also gierfer.]

Gilly flowers, or rather July flowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts: red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.

Fair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,

Fair is the maygold, for potage meet.

Gay, Pastorals.

GILSE. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

In the north of England, a young salmon.

GILT. n. s. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter.

Now obsolete.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,

With rainy marching in the painful field.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume,

they mockt thee for too much curiosity; in thy rage thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary.

Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.

GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way.

Pope.

GILTHEAD. n. s. [gilt and head.] A sea fish.

The gilthead that doth clive [cleave] Sicilian sea, is brought unto the board alive.

Hobart on Providence, p. 380.

He maketh him to die of a surfeit of giltheads, (a fish, called auratus, or aureola.)

Fuller, Holy War, p. 151.

GILT-TAIL. n. s. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM.† adj. [An old word. Welsh, gwymp, beautiful. Lye.] Neat; spruce; well dressed. Hence the modern expression jenny, i. e. gimmy. See also GIMP. Gaven Douglas uses gin.

GI'MBAL, or GI'MBOL. * See GEMEL and GIMMAL.

GI'MCRACK.† n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine, Dr. Johnson.—It is more probably from gin and crack, a smart youth, a spruce fellow. See the 13th sense of CRACK. See also GIMP. Gimcrack appears to have been first applied to the person, which has escaped the notice of Skinner and Johnson; and to have been used in a contemptuous sense, as it now sometimes is. Afterwards the word came to signify any trifling contrivance.] A slight or trivial machinery.

Lady, I pity you:

You are a handsome and a sweet young lady,

And ought to have a handsome man yoked to you,

An understanding too! This is a gimcrack!

Ben Jonson, and Fl. Elder Brother.

For though these gimcracks were away,

However, more reduced and plain,

The watch would still a watch remain;

But if the horal orbit ceased,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all those trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's bedges, and running your lios cross his grounds?

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Hall.

GI'MLET. n. s. [gibelet, gimbelet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit.

Mamm.

GI'MMAL.† n. s. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gemella, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint device or piece of machinery.

Hanner.

I think by some odd gimmals or device their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on.

Else they could not hold out so as they do.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Some of their Italian friars have confessed withal, that their fashion is, when all their gimmals are in tune for a miracle, to enjoin some sely old woman in her confessions, to say her devotions before the altar, where the image prepared to play a miracle doth stand.

Sir E. Stanley, State of Religion.

GI'MMAL Ring. * See GEMEL.

GI'MMER.† n. s. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic.

More, Divine Dialogues.

Who knows not how the famous Kenish idol moved her eyes, and hands, by those secret gimmers, which way every puppet-play can imitate?

By. Hist. to Sir D. Harvey, Dec. 1. Epist. 6.

Here lay a wheel, there the balance; here one gimmer, there another.

By. Hall, Select

Thoughts, § 9.

GI'MMER-LAMB. * n. s. An ewe-lamb. Gimmer is also a two-year old female sheep. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dialect, and Brockett. Of uncertain etymology.

GIMP. * adj. [Welsh, gwymp, pretty; Lat. comptus, neat.] Nice; spruce; trim. In the north of England, it is applied to women, and denotes slinness or elegance of shape. And in vulgar language, a gimcrack is a spruce girl. Gaven Douglas applies the word to flowers; "gimp gilliflowers," Virg. Æn. 12.

GIMP.† n. s. [probably from gimp, old Eng. neat, spruce, though indeed it is pronounced with g hard. See GIMP and GIMCRACK.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

He walk'd the place,

Through tape, toys, tinsel, gimp, perfume, and lace.

Forrest, Elegy to an Old Beauty.

GIN.† n. s.

1. A trap; a snare. [from engine, Dr. Johnson.—Lye considers it as descended from the Icel. ginn, to deceive; but gin, for engine, is very old in our language. Barret, in his Alv. 1580, defines a snare "a ginne or engine."] As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,

And pasture make. Sidney.

For a gin, and for a snare, to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

Jerem. viii. 14.

I know thee, through treason and deceitful gin,

Had slain sir Mordant. Spenser, F. Q.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;

So doth the coney struggle in the net.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If those, who have but sense, can shun

The engines that have them annoy'd;

Little for me had reason done,

If I could out thy gins avoid.

Ben Jonson, Forest.

I know thy traile,

Through dewy to my cast, thy gins and toils;

No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd.

Milton, S. A.

He made a planetary gin,

Which run would run the wife o'w heads in,

And come on purpose to be taken,

Without th' expense of cheese and bacon.

Hudibras.

Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,

And ankle free from iron gins. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture. [from engine.]

Typographers' joints were stretched on a gin.

Spenser.

3. In mechanics, a machine for raising great weights.

4. A pump worked by rotatory sails. [from engine.]

The delts would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any dits or saughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Ray.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water dripping on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coasts.

5. [Contracted from GINNEY, which see.]
The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
Gin shops sourer sights return. Pope.

- To GIN, * v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a trap.

So, so, the woodcock's gins'd.

Boswell, and Fl. Nic. Falour.

- To GIN, * v. n. [Sax. ginnan.] To begin. This is the origin of our begin; which Mr. Mason, with others, has inaccurately considered as a mere poetical abbreviation.

The majesty of his schal gynne to be destroyed,
When all Asia and the world worshipeth.

Wicliffe, Acts, xix.

When thine horns new ginn to spring.

Chaucer, Tr. and Criss, v. 657.

Our play

Leaps o'er the vault and listings of those broils,
Ginning in the middle.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Criss, Prod.

- GIN, * conj. [Sax. gin.] Gin is no other than the participle ginn, ginn, gin. Mr. Horne Tooker. But see GIFT.]

Grass.

- GING, * n. s. [an old word for gang.] A company. See GANG.

To be auditors in the galleys, there to employ and exercise their turbulent, seditious, litigious, routinous, larsh and quarrelous talent upon the ging, svabbers, and beccallers.

Tr. of Beccallers, (1636.) p. 60.

I would not willingly
See or be seen to any ging.

B. Jonson, New Inn, (1631.)

Proceeding further, I am met with a whole
ging of words and phrases not mine.

Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

- GIN'GER, † n. s. [Sax. ginger; Lat. zingiber, gingiber; Ital. gingero; Gr. zingyphos, an Arabian plant; gingerfel, Pers. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 316. Chaucer writes it gingiber, Rom. R. 1369. * Gilofre, and licorice, gingiber, &c.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris;
these are produced in the head or club,
each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular;
of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste,
though aromatic, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill, Mat. Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow.

Pope, Dunciad.

- GIN'GERBREAD, n. s. [ginger and bread.]
A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatic seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread.

Shakespeare, Lear's Lab. Lost.

Her currents there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread.

King, Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks' frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon Thamus. Beef.

- GIN'GERLY, † adv. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson.—Serenus derives it from the Icel. ganger, walking.
Su. gaengra, to go step by step. It appears to have been very common; and among good writers, though Dr. Johnson has cited only Shakespeare; nor is it yet disused.] Cautiously; nicely.

Go she never so gingerly, her honesty is gone away. Shelton, Poems, p. 48.

What is that you

Took up so gingerly? Shaks, Two Gent. of Ver.
Has it a corn? or does it walk on compass?

It breeds so gingerly? Boswell, and Fl. Mort. Mod.

We must make use of that rotten staff of nature, as far as its strength will bear, and that very gingerly too; never daring to lean or lay our whole weight upon it. Hammond, Works, li. 600.

He came to him with a soft pace, treading gingerly,
(as we speak,) after a nice and delicate manner. Patrick on 1 Sam. xlv. 32.

He walks like a benighted traveller in a dangerous road, and is fain to feel out his steps, and to tread gingerly and cautiously. Scott, Works, li. 28.

Pray observe how gingerly he translates "temperance," moderate in the enjoyment of pleasure!
Whereas temperance, according to Tully, consists in the neglecting and despising of pleasure.

Bentley, Phil. Ligu. § 44.

- GI'NGERNESS, n. s. Niceness; tenderness. Dic.

- GI'NGIVAL, adj. [gingiva, Lat.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their prolusion between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlus appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perversi-ness. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

- To GING'LE, † v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It is probably the Teut.
kincken, to ring; German, klingen.
Casaubon would derive it from the xyrologos, to move quickly, to shake.]

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; i. to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

Did this tale here

Of knighthood ask no other ornaments
Than other countries glittering slow, poor pride,
A gingling spur, a fester, a white hand,
A frizzled hair, powder'd perfumes, and lust,
Drinking sweet wines, surfeits and ignorance,
Rashly and easily would I venture on't.

Boswell, and Fl. An. of Melan.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound.

Gay, Trivia.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope, Epist.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

Those petty secretaries—who by their various kind of gingling fancies in serving God, &c.

Hovell, Instruct. For. Tron. (1642.) p. 227.

- To GING'LE, v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

- GI'NGLE, † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

Many of their fancies, which amongst themselves
they hold to be strong lines, and quintessential staff, being turned to another tongue, become flat, and prove attentions but mere gins.

Hovell, Instruct. For. Tron. p. 158.

2. Affection in the sound of periods.

GIN'GLYMOID, adj. γινγλυμοειδής, a hinge, and αἰώδης Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymo joint. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

- GI'NGLYMUS, n. s. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge; of which the elbow is an instance. Wicseman.

GINNET, n. s. [ginn]. A nag; a mule;
a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GI'NGENG, n. s. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent.
It is of a very agreeable and aromatic smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acid and aromatic, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

- To GIP, v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

- GI'PON, * SEE JUPPON.

GI'PSY, † n. s. [Corrupted from Egyptian, for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations. Dr. Johnson.—“The received opinion sets them down for Egyptians, and makes them out to be the descendants of those vagabond votaries of Isis, who appeared to have exercised in ancient Rome pretty much the same profession as that followed by the present gipsies, viz. fortune-telling, strolling up and down, and pilfering.” Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29.—
“The Gipsies, as it should seem by some striking proofs derived from their language, came originally from Hindustan, where they are supposed to have been of the lowest class of Indians, namely
Paria, or, as they are called in Hindostan, Sudras. They are thought to have migrated about A. D. 1408, or 1409, when Timur Beg ravaged India for the purpose of spreading the Mahometan religion.—They must certainly have been in Egypt before they reached us, otherwise it is incomprehensible how the report arose that they were Egyptians.” Brand, Pop. Antiquities. See also the adjective GI'PSY.—Their first appearance in Europe was in the fifteenth century. Our old lexicography demominates them "counterfeit Egyptians."]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

I perceive him to be more ignorant in his art of divining than any gypsy. Milton, Apol. for Scurrilous.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his appetite is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gyp for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantick gyp once, the house he haunts, And in wild phrases speaks dissembled truths. Prior, Henry and Emma.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philtres, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A sigil in his hand the gyp bears.
In all other a prophetic sieve and sheers. Addison.

I, near you stile, three sallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look;
Bid me beware, and thrice their hands they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Leads, to his lady was but a kitchen-wench;
Eldo a dowry. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Cleopatra a gyp; Helen and Hero biddings and harlots. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gyp, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes;
The gyp knows her power't, and flies. Prior.

- G'IPSY. * adj.

1. Denoting the language spoken by the Gypsies.

It seems to be well proved in this learned work [A Dissertation on the Gipsies, &c. written in German by H. M. G. Grellman, translated into English by M. Rapier, Esq. 1787.] that these gipsies came originally from Hindostan. A very copious catalogue is given of Gipsy and Hindostan words collated, by which it appears that every third Gipsy word is likewise an Hindostan one, or still more, that out of every thirty Gipsy words, eleven or twelve are constantly of Hindostan. This agreement will appear uncommonly great, if we recollect that the above words have only been learned from the Gipsies within these very few years, consequently after a separation of four complete centuries from Hindostan, their supposed native country. Broad, Popular Antiquities.

2. Denoting any jargon or cant.

The regicide directory on the day, which in their gyp jargon they call the 5th of Pluviose, closes us with eluding our declarations. Burke.

- G'IPSYISM. * n. s. [from gypsy.] The state of a gipsy.

The companion of his [the tinker's] travels is some fool, sun-burnt gypsy, that since the terrible statute recanted gypsime, [gipsyism], and is turned pollard. Overbury, Character. dign. 1, 2.

- G'RANDOLE. * n. s. [French; from the Ital. grandola; a kind of firework; "ruota composta di fuochi lavorati, che gira, appiccandosi il fuoco." Della Crusca. Vocab.] A large kind of branched candlestick; a chandelier. Modern.

- G'IRASOLE. n. s. [girasole, Fr.]

1. The herb turnsole.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD.† v. a. pret. girded, or girt. Gyban, Sax. garta, Icel. gurtan, Germ.

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their loads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac. x. 3.

2. To put on as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Suff.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 25.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Girt on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milton, P. L.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison, Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

To invest, then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in regard of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant word of York. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton, P. L.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fice linen, and I covered thee with silk. Exod. vi. 10.

Tysiphone keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

Those, with what skill they had, together sow'd,
To gird the waist; vain covering, if it bide
Their guilt, and drugged shame! Milton, P. L.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton, P. R.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyctean isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham Laid Amalthes, and her feed on Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rheas' eye. Milton, P. L.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakespeare.

TO GIRDL.† v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original: it may be formed by a very customary transposition from girdle or cut. Dr. Johnson.

— It is most probably from the Saxon gyrd, a staff, whence a hit or blow, first in the literal sense; then, in the figurative, for a stroke of wit or sarcasm.

The Teut. gorden is actively, to strike, smite, or beat. So Chaucer uses it. Chaucer accordingly notices the verb gird, "to strike." To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolishly compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laugh more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It could not but go deep into thy soul, to hear these bitter and girding reproaches from them. Thou camest to save. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

We, that are brothers of the blade, know how to put up harder and more girding repartees than this with patience and philosophy.

Rp. Parker, Repr. of Release. Temp. p. 51.

- GIRD.† n. s. A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly.

This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson means his etymology of the verb. But neither his de-inition nor his etymology of this word will be generally received. We may refer to the Sax. gyrd, in the sense of a stroke or blow, and so define the word, a taunt, a reproach, a sneer.

Curculio may chafe ill at his heart ache, ere any be offered with his girdle. Greene, Gyn. of Abuse, (1579.)

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird for shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All the sharp quips, and witty girds, wherewith Martial doth whet and embellish the conclusions of his [epigrams]. Florio, Trans. of Montaigne, (1615.) p. 298.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tidals.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference.

- G'IRDLER. n. s. [from gird.]

1. In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Mason, Mech. Exp.

2. A satirist.

We great girdlers call it a short saying of sharp wit with a bitter sense in a sweet coat. Lillo, Alceas. and Company.

- G'IRDLING. * n. s. [from gird.] A covering. Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth. Isaiah, xli. 24.

G'IRDLER. n. s. [Dybbel, Saxon; girdur, Goth. Dr. Johnson has cited four lines from Marlow's Passionate Shepherd, in which he ascribes to Shakespeare; in which, however, the word is not girdle, but girle.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

Moses — girded them with girdles. Levit. vii. 13.

The same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins. St. Matt. iii. 4.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle. Brown, Falc. Err.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword, and bow.
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cavely.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confined two mighty monarchies. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. The zodiac.

Great breasts in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Becon.

4. A round iron plate for baking. Northumberland. Pegge.

- TO GIRDL.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle blades, girdling one another Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about. Shakespeare, A. John.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdst in those wolves! Shakespeare, Times.

But call you these true spirits ill affected,
That whilst the wars were, serv'd like walls and ribs
To girle in the kingdom?

Reum. and Fl. The Captain.

GIR'DLEBELT. n. s. [girle and belt.] The belt that encircles the waist.
Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold.

Dryden, Æn.

GIR'DLER.† n. s. [from girle.] A maker of girldes. Hulot.
Talk with the girlder or the mill'ner.

Reum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

GIRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL.† n. s. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from gyra of the same signification;
Minsheu from gerrula, Latin, a prattler, or gircella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Icelandic karlinna, a woman. So far Dr. Johnson.—Girl was formerly an appellation common to both sexes. Serenius says, that from the Su. Goth. karl, a man, many etymologists deduce our word girl. "The young gyrlas of the diocese," in the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, may be the young men or the young women,
the appellation, as already noticed,
being common to both. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's Notes on Chaucer. See also Pilkington's Remarks upon several Passages of Scripture, 1759, p. 35. "In old English, the word gyrl is exactly expressive of the Hebrew יָרֵב, and means a young person of either sex."]

1. A young woman, or female child.
In those usel'd days was my wife a gyrl. Shaks.
I will love thee ne'er or less, my gyrl. Shakespeare.
The fool Amphimachus, to feed brought gold to be his wracke,
Proude gyrl like, that doth ever bear her dowre
upon her back.
A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every gyrl to practice on. Dan.
Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave castron would to dance with gyrls.

Reacomm.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a gyrl, like her, must be divided. Dryden.
2. Among sportsmen, a rebeck of two years age. Bullockar, and Chambers.
GIRLHOOD.† n. s. [gyrl and hood.] The state of a gyrl. A proper word; but, I believe, of modern usage.

I regret that it is not in my power to collect more anecdotes of Dr. Johnson's infancy. My mother passed her days of girlhood with an uncle at Warwick, consequently was absent from a home in the school-boy days of the great man.

Miss Seward to Mr. Bonelli, (1785), Lett. i. 38.

GIRLISH. adj. [from gyrl.] Suiting a
gyrl; youthful.

In her gyrlish age she kept sheep on the moor.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from gyrlish.] In a gyrlish manner.

TO GIRN.† v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person. Dr. Johnson.
— It is also used in the north of England for grin; and our old dictionaries refer grin to grin. See Barret and Sherwood. And see TO GRIN.

They make amicks faces, grin, mow and mope

like an ape.

By. Harcourt, Declaration of Popish Impostures.

It has been always found an excellent way of girting at the government in scripture-phrase.

South, Sermon. ii. 118.

GIRN.† n. s. A corruption of the substantive grin. See TO GIRN.

This is at least a gyrl of fortune, if

Not a fair smile.

Danvers, Wits.

GIRN-OCK. n. s. [acus major.] A kind of fish.

GIRT.† The part. pass. of gird.

Having your loins girt about with truth.

Ephes. vi. 14.

The soul may deem herself too straitly girt up.

Merr. Conf. Cabb. p. 238.

TO GIRT.† v. a. [lcel. gyrt; Germ.
gürten. See TO GIRN.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.
In the broad ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe.

Thomson.

GIRT.† n. s. [from the verb. German,
gyrt.]

1. A band by which the saddle or burthen is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his gyrt;

And here, alas! hath laid him to the dirt.

Milton, Ep. on Hobson.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by that of the gyrt, which gyrt hath a bolster in the middle,

and the ends are tacked firmly together.

Warman, Surgery.

3. The compass measured by the gyrtle,

or enclosing bandage.

You shall see a pigny in stature as big as a giant in the gyrt. Hammond, Works, iv. 677.

GIRTN. n. s. [from gyrt.]

1. A band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the saddle turn'd round, or the gyrtle brake;

For now on the ground, now for his sake.

The law is found. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,

Along the high celestial road;

The steed oppress'd, would break his gyrt,

To raise the lumber from the earth.

Minotaur galls on alone;

The roads are with his fell'w'ers strown;

This breaks a gyrt, and that a bone.

2. The compass measured by the gyrtle,

or enclosing bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the gyrt.

Addison, Firebricks.

TO GIRTN. v. a. To bind with a gyrt.

TO GISE GROUND.† v. a. [old Fr. gisier.

It is a contraction of agist. See TO AGIST.] Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Bailey.

GIV'LE. Among the English Saxons, giva, signifies a pledge; thus, Fredegise is a pledge of peace; Gislebert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus.

Gibson's Camden.

GITH. n. s. [nigella.] An herb called Guinea pepper.

GI'TERN.† n. s. [properly cithern, or cithern. See CITHERN. Lat. cithara; old Fr. giterne, whence giterne and guittern.] A kind of harp; a guitar;
a rebeck, according to our old dictionaries.

The gittern and the kit the wandering foliars like. Dryden, Polyd. S. 4.

Then your qualities;

As playing on a gittern, or a jew's-trump.

Reum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

TO GI'TERN.† v. n. [from the noun.] To play on the gittern. This verb is used by Chaucer.

The first church, beginning, may relate the course of the city; each evening every one, with mistress or Gaymeade, gitering along the streets, or solacing on the banks of Jordan.

Milton, Plans for Tragedies on Scripture Subjects.

TO GIVE.† v. a. preter. gave; part. pass.
given. Saxon, giban; German, gib; Goth.
giben, Germ. gifu, Su. Goth. gifu, [eland.]

1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward; not to sell.

I had a master that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.

Temple.

While tradesmen starve, these Philonels are gay;

For gen'rous lords had rather give than pay.

Young.

Half useless doom'd to live,

Pray'r and advice are all I have to give. Harte.

2. To transmit from himself to another by hand, speech, or writing; to deliver.
The woman whom I did give to be with me,
she gave me the ure, and I gave it. Gen. iii. 12.

They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. St. Matt. xxiv. 38.

These bills were printed out only every week,

but also a general account of the whole year was given in upon the Thursday before Christmas.

Grant, Bills of Mortality.

We shall give an account of these phenomena.

Burnet.

Aristotle advises poets to put things evil wisely and impossible into their poems, nor give them licence to run into wildness. Boome.

3. To put into one's possession; to consign; to impart; to communicate.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.

St. Matt. xiv.

Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple.

Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm,

and I will remove the earth. Temple.

If the agreement of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head,

that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke.

4. To pay as price or reward, or in exchange.

All that a man hath will he give for his life.

Job, ii. 4.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,

If you did know for whom I gave the ring,

And would conceive for what I gave the ring,

And how unwillingly I left the ring,

You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Shakespeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of meat, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowny, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal: the king, somewhat affraid, said, to whom do you appeal? the prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear.

Diogenes, Apollonius.
Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal.

6. To quit; to yield as due.
Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man.

7. To confer; to impart.
I will bless her, and give thee a son also of her.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself.
What beauties I lose in some places, I give to others which had them not originally.

8. To expose; to yield without retention.
All clad in skins of beasts the jav'lin bear;
Give to the wanton winds their flowing hair.

9. To grant to allow.
'Tis given me once again to behold my friend.

10. To yield; not to deny.
He has not given Luther fairer play.

11. To afford; to supply.
This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.

12. To empower; to commission.
The due libation and the solemn pray'r;
Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine.

13. To enable.
God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers, and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard.

14. To pay.
The applause and approbation I give to both your speeches.

15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.
So you would be the first that gave this sentence, And he that suffers.

16. To exhibit; to show.
This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible.

17. To exhibit as the product of a calculation.
The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a piece.

18. To do any act of which the consequence reaches others.
VOL. II.

As we desire to give no offence ourselves, so neither shall we take any at the difference of judgement in others.

19. To exhibit; to send forth as odours from any body.
In oranges the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.

20. To add; to apply.
The Helots, of the other side, wanting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies.

21. To resign; to yield up.
Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we give ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death.

22. To conclude; to suppose.
The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given, To ducan on evil, or to work my downfall.

from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it.

Addison, Spect.

28. To GIVE over. To addict; to attach to.

Zelmae, governor said direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee.

Sidney.

When the Babylonians had given themselves out to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down.

Gren, Comed.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or to the world.

Temple.

29. To GIVE over. To conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will endeavour to prescribe to you.

Suckling.

'Tis not amiss, ere y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desperate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,

It is better.

The desperate'st is the wisest course.

It is better.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction.

Addison, Spect.

Her conduct was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over.

Arbuthnot.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That whilst he creeps, his vig'rous thoughts can soar.

Pope.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over.

Seyf.

30. To GIVE over. To abandon.

That the Edomites should give over the villages of the Jews which they held. I Esdr. ix. 50.
The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over.

Hoad.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became monk.

Knollys.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure.

Milton, S. A.

The cause for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er?

Hudibras.

31. To GIVE out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ.

Addison.

32. To GIVE out. To show in false appearance.

She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,

Shakespeare, Othello.

To seal her father's eyes up close as oak.

Shakespeare, Othello.

33. To GIVE a person his own. To rebuke; to chide a person according to his demerits.

Aristotle has made it the business of almost thirty stanzas — not only to praise that precious part of the creation, but also to make a sharp retort on their enemies; to give no mankind their own, and to tell them plainly that from their envy it proceeds that the virtue and great actions of women are purposely concealed.

Dryden, Pref. to Falsht's Dial. concern. Women.

34. To GIVE up. To resign; to quit; to yield.

The people, weary of the miseries of war, would give him up, if they saw him shrink.

Sidney.

He has betray'd your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt your city Rome.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The sun, breaking out by his cheerful beams, revived many, before ready to give up the ghost for cold, and gave comfort to them all.

André, Hist.

He found the lord Hapton in trouble for the loss of the regiment of foot at Alton, and with the unexpected assurance of the giving up of Arundel-castle.

Clarendon.

Let us give ourselves wholly up to Christ in heart and desire.

By. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Such an expectation will never come to pass; therefore I'll en give it up, and go and fret myself.

I can give up to the historians of your country the names of so many generals and heroes which crowd their annals.

Dryden.

He declares himself to be now satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause.

Dryden.

The leagues made between several states disowning all claim to the land in the other, notwithstanding, have, by common consent, given up their pretences to their natural right.

Locke.

If they give them up to their reasons, then they with them give up all truth and farther enquiry, and think there is no such thing as certainty.

Locke.

We should see him give up again to the common of nature, whatever was more than would supply the conveniences of life.

Locke.

Julia's surrender, since his father's death, would give up Africa into Caesar's hands, And make him lord of half the burning zone.

Addison, Cato.

Learn to be honest men, give up your leaders, And pardon shall descend on all the rest.

Addison, Cato.

A popish priest threatened to excommunicate a Northumberland squire, if he did not give up to him the church lands.

Addison, Freeholder.

He saw the celestial duties acting in a confederacy against him, and immediately gave up a cause which was excluded from all possibility of success.

Addison, Spect.

An old gentleman, who had been engaged in an argument with the emperor, upon his friend's telling him he wondered he would give up the question when he had the better, I am never asked, says he, to be confuted by one who is master of fifty legions.

Addison, Spect.

He is every brought to give up the clearest evidence.

Atterbury.

The constant health and longevity of men must be given up also, as a groundless conceit.

Hendley.

Have the physicians give 'n up all their pretences? Cannot they add a few days to a monarch's? Rever.

Rever.

These people were obliged to demand peace, and give up to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily.

Arbuthnot.

Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to a thousand prejudices, that he shall be consigned over to the follies of his own heart.

Watts.

Give yourselves up to some hours of leisure.

Watts.

35. To GIVE up. To abandon.

If any give up to believe lies, some must be led up to tell them.

Sidney, Hist.

Our minds naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are most accustomed to;

and we always find that play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole woman.

Addison, Guardian.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame.

Pope.

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer.

Pope.

Few men, who, through misfortunes, choose not to drown, should not, however, give up neatness.

Collier.

Scarcely had he spoken when the cloud gave way; The mist flew upward, and dissolv'd in day.

Dryden, Æn.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows, Battered and flat, and beaten to his bones.

Dryden, Æn.

38. The word give is used with great laxity; the general idea is that of transmitting from one to another.

To GIVE, &c.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase uncouth French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun; The enemy goes on with fury led.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Hannibal gave upon the Romans.

Hume, Rom. Hist.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, biscuits, sweetmeats, and salt.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like season'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,

Herbert.

Then chiefly lives. Unless it is kept in a hock-house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw mail.

Mortimer.

Before you carry your large coats in, open them once, and spread them. Hay is apt to give in the cock.

Mortimer.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground,
Then nimble shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again.

Daniel, Civ. Wars.

4. To GIVE back. To retire.

Tuorio, give back, or else embrace thy death.

Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

5. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way. Not in use. Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Hayward. It is surely still used for to yield to superior strength.

In the mean time, what doth St. Paul? Doth he give in?

By. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in.

Hayward.

6. To GIVE in to. [A French phrase.]

To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medallists; the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explanation of it.

Addison on Medals.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in these general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

7. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.
The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind. Locke.

8. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can show we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, through union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not over so; to him again; intreat him; kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

The state of human actions are so variable, that to try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Demetrius, king of Macedonia, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon, Apophthegms.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met over, and to shameful silence brought, Yet, gives not over, though desperate of success. Milton, P. R.

Shall we kindle all this flame Only to put it out again?
And must we now give over?
And only end where we began?
In vain this mischief we have done, If we can do no more. Denham.

It could be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any further pursuits after fame. Addison.

He cooled again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

9. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts, viii. 9.

I have not will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

10. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they, Like moles within us, leave and cast about;
And till they're filled and clutch their prey;
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.
Madam, I always believ'd you so stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER, n. s. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford Our gifts their own gifts. Milton, P. L.

By the how fairly is the giver now Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost. Long since. Milton, P. R.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Both gifts destructive to the giver prove;
Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES, † n. s. pl. Fetters or shackles for the feet. See GIVE. For the word is used in the singular, though Dr. Johnson notices it only in the plural number.

GI'VING. n. s. [from To give.]

1. The act of bestowing any thing.

Constant at church and change, his gains were sure;
His gifts rare, save farthings to the poor. Pope.

2. The act of alleging what is not real.

His givings out were of an infinite distance From his true meant design. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

GI'ZARD. n. s. [gésier, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzera.

1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzard. More.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glands distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muscular stomach. Ray.

They nestle near the throne,
By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind; as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated sots In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so curiously hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so lean to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Entrée.

GLACIATION. † n. s. [from glaciare.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in ball, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown, Ful. Err.
A violent motion of water is a preservative against glaciation. Dr. Robinson, Calm Vent. of Brown's Vulg. Err. p. 120.

GLA'CIOUS. adj. [glacio, Latin.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glaucous bodies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLA'CIS. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD.† adj. [glæt, glab, Saxon; glad, Danish; from the icel. glæda, to exhilarate, glad, gladdie, I have made glad. The comparative gladder, and superlative gladdest, are not often used; nor has Dr. Johnson given any example of them. But they are now shewn to exist.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, vii. 66.

'Twas the most duteous wench, the best companion,

When I was pleas'd, the happiest and the gladdest, The modestest sweet nature dwell within her. Beaumont and Fl. Loyal Subject.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers: Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope, Messiah.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD.† v. a. [Sax. glaban.] This verb is one of our oldest. To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

Tell us twich twine as may our better glads, Chaucer, Nonnes Priests Prol.

Like to a flower that feels no heat of sunne, Which may her feeble leaves with comfort glade. Spenser, F. Q. vi. s. 44.

Your presence glads our days. Shakspeare, Pericles.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour Of th' icy north; from front-bound Alps heads His admanition fetters fall; green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Libyan sands. Crassus.

Heaven smil'd, and gladdened was the heart of man.
Dryden, Fob.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice, and detest oppression. Owe.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man.
Pope.

If justice Philip's costly head
Some fine Philis's rhymes disburthen,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both labors and nurses. Swift.

To GLAD, * v. n. To be glad; to rejoice; Woe is useless this neuter verb; but it is now wholly obsolete.

Gladd's thou in such sort?
I call my wish back. Massey, Virgin Martyr.

To GLAD'DEN, v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to ex-ultate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him.

A kind of vital heat in the soul ebbeth and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it.
Addison, Spect.

GLADDER † n. s. [from glad.] This substantive is from Chaucer; as Dryden has literally copied the whole line, in which it occurs, from him.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that ex-ultates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron, —
Hare pipe, goddess. Dryden, Fob.

GLADE † n. s. [Dr. Johnson strangely imagines it to be from the Sax. glædan, to be hot or to shine; Mr. H. Tooker from ge-hlādan, to cover, part. ge-hlād, whence the English glade, applied to a spot covered or hidden with trees or boughs. — It seems, however, to be still connected with the Icel. hlād, a way, a passage. Barret thus describes what a glade is, Alv. 1580. "To make a glade in the midst of a wood; to loppe or cut away boughs where they let the light."]
A lawn or opening in a wood. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flann'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser, F. Q.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade.

Spenser, Huld. Tale.
I laid me down
And listened to the words she sung; for then,
Through a small glade cut by the fishermen,
I saw it was your daughter.

Brown, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade,
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton, P. L.

When say, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convey.

Milton, Comus.
For noonday's heat are closer arbores made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ning arched.

Dryden, State of Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thine trees arise that shun each other's shades.

By the heroes' armed shades,
Gl'ring through the gloomy glades;
Hs the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife!

Pope, St. Cecilia's Day.
She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New dress and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLAD'DEN, † n. s. [from gladius, Latin, a GLAD'DEN, † sword.] Swordgrass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

GLAD'DEN, † adj. [glad and fall.] Full of joy and gladness. Not in use.
There leave we them in pleasure and repast,
Spending their joyous days and playfull nights.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 40.
GLAD'DEN, † n. s. [glad and fullness.]
Joy; gladness. Obsolete.
And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladdfulness, and kingly joviance.

Spenser, F. Q.
GLADIATOR † n. s. [Latin; gladiat- teur, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

They had several delishtome shews to exaltate the people; gladiators; combats of men with themselves; with wild beasts, &c.
Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 569.

Then whilst his foe such gladiator foils,
The sabbat, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Dean.
Beside, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have yow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden, Pers.
Writers—have given too great pomp and magnificence to the exploits of the ancient beargarder; and made their gladiators, by fabulous tradition, greater than Gorman and others of Great Britain! Tatler, No. 31.

GLADIATORY, † adj. [Lat. gladiatorius; old French, gladiatoire.] Belonging to prizefighters or swordplayers.

The Romans did use themselves into their gladiatory fights and bloody spectacles, till acquaintance with wounds and blood might make them less fear it in the wars.

Rp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 27.
At Rome there were usually those gladiatory sports; bloody, sword-killing sports; they killed men in sport. Dr. Westfield, Scen. (1646), p. 77.

GLADIATORIAL, † adj. [Lat. gladiatorius.]
Relating to prizefighters.

Consider only the shocking carnage made in the human species by the exposure of infants, the gladiatorial shews, and the exceedingly cruel usage of slaves, allowed and practised by the ancient Pagans. Rp. Fortius, Scen. i. xiii.

GLADIATURE, † n. s. [Lat. gladiatura.]
Fencing; swordplay.

In their antiphetical gladiatures, the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar.
Gaydon on D. Quix. p. 271.

GLADLY, † adv. [Sax. glædlice.] Joyfully; with gaitety; with nerriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
You are going to set us array'd; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross
the glory of.

Milton to Pope.
GLADNESS, † n. s. [Sax. glædnes.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and bonour. Father, viii. 16.
And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.

St. Luke, i. 14.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had kept before;
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the peris'd they deplore.

Dryden.
GLADSHIP, † n. s. [from glad.] State of gladness. Obsolete.
And such a sorrow hath to him take,
That gladship be hath all forsake.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. i.
GLAD'SOME, † adj. [from glad.]
1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladness company.

Spenser, F. Q.
The gladstome ghosts in circling tortues attend.
And with unwear'd eyes behold their friend.

Dryden.
2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gaitety. In this sense it is used by Chaucer.

Swiche thing is gladsum, as it thinketh me,
And of swiche thing were goodly for to telle,
Chaucer, Nonnes Priests Pro.

Figurative expressions of some white and glad-sum days shortly to succeed.
Spenser on Poet. p. 155.

Each morn they wak'd use with a sprightly by;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsume day.

Prior.
GLAD'SOME, † adv. [from gladsume.]
With gaitety and delight.
I remembered myself by and by,
And beheld the sunne shine so gladsumely.

Poissant Pastourel, f. c. d. sign. A. i. b.
GLAD'SOMENESS, † n. s. [from gladsume.]
Gaitety; shewiness; delight.

GLAZI, † n. s. [Glap, Saxon, amber; glaz, Danish, glass; glaz, Icel. glaz, French;
glaz, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.
Unlekked lime, chalk, and glaze of an ey.
Chaucer, Chan. Troas. Tale.

Take the glaze of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Venician on Drawing.

2. Any viscous transparent matter, like
the white of an egg.
Her lewde lippes twayne,
They slaver, men sayne,
Lyke a rogeye raine.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, p. 124.
Blood, purple, shiny glaze,
That in his body so abundant were.

Mir. for Mag. p. 109.
I found the tongue black and dry, with a black glaze on the teeth. Fordyce on the Rock, Acad. p. 11.

To GLAZE, v. a. [glazier, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLAZE, † See GLAZE.
GLANCE, † n. s. [glantz, German, glitter;
glanz, Icel. and Goth. splendour; from glad, light; glaz, to shine.]

1. A sudden flash of light or splendour.
His off ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam;
The other's not; for his was not sincere.

Milton, P. L.
2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.
The aspects which procure here are not gazings,
but sudden glances and dartings of the eyes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity.

Dryden, Dufrenoy.

Boldly the look'd, like one of high degree;
Yet never seem'd to rest a glance on me;
To which I only joy'd, for truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.
3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.

TO GLANCE, v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd. Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rever.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it nam'd you two outright. Shadpeare.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye;
to play the eye.
O'd' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again, and kiss. Swickling.

Mighty dulness crowd'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope, Dunciad.

5. To censure by oblique hints.
How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Thebes? Shakspeare.
Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed prosecution of his holiness and his attendants, not withstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.
He had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.

TO GLANCE, v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.
Glancing an eye of pity on his loaves,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

GLANCING, n. s. [from glance.] Censure by oblique hints.
By this upbraiding to me the borderlines, as by other suspicious glancings in his look, he would seem privily to point me out to his readers as one, whose custom of life were not honest but licentious. Milton, Apol. for Smectymachus.

GLANCINGLY, adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.
Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something to this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyages. Hutchinson on Providence.

GLAND, n. s. [glans, Latin; gland,
French; Gland, Gr. glandos, Dor.
whence, by contraction, the Lat. glans,
glandis.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The stomach begu'd deep in the body of the glands. Wicmann.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with the arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm.

GLANDERED, n. s. [from glanders.]
Having the distemper called the glanders.
Being drunk in plenty, it [tar-water] hath recovered even a glandered horse, that was thought incurable. By Berkeley, Farther Thoughts on Tar-Water.

GLANDERS, n. s. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.
His horse is possess'd with the glanders, and like to lose in the chine. Shakspeare, Tem. of the Shrove.

GLANDIFEROUS, adj. [glans and fero,
Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns,
or fruit like acorns.
The beech is of two sorts, and numbered among the glandiferous trees. Mortimer, Herb.

GLANDULAR, n. s. [Fr. glandulaire.]
Pertaining to the glands. The modern word for glandulous.

GLANDULE, n. s. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glands to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Roy.

GLANDULOSITY, n. s. [from glandulous.]
A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLANDULOUS, adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glandulosus, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous
tumours and ruptures of the lymphatics.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO GLARE, v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]
1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.
He is every where about conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cæsar stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden, Æn.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakspeare, Macb.
Look, how pale he glares! Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Now friends no more, our walking hand in hand;

But when they met, they made a surly stand,
And glar'd like angry lions as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden, P. L.

3. To shine ostentatiously; or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest or most correct. Fisher on the Classics.

TO GLARE, v. a. To shoot such splen-dour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit to shine ruin'd, and every eye
Glaz'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurs'd, that wistful'd all their strength. Milton, P. L.

GLARE, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare,
From far, and seem'd to shaw the freezing air. Dryden, Fob.

I have griev'd to see a person of quality giving by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flam-beaux. Addison, Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detected glare,
She sighs for love. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton, P. L.

GLARE, n. s. Any viscous, transparent matter. See GLAIR.

GLAREOUS, adj. [glarius, Fr. glaucosus,
Lat. from glair.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

There is a glaucous liquor contained in the bowels of infants, and many other animals, when they are born, which it is necessary to carry off.
Gregory's Comparative View, (1767), p. 23.

GLARING, adj. Applied to any thing notorious; as, a glaring crime.

GLARINGLY, adv. [from glaring.] Evidently;
notoriously.

I know not whether the brick-lust men in their marital liveries, and the talow-chandlers in their sky-coloured frocks, are not too glaringly obtrusive for a royal eye to bear. The Student, n. 229.

The passions, necessarily suscitating a violent agitation in the soul, declare themselves gloriously to the aspect.

Philosoph. Lett. upon Physic. (1751), p. 161.

GLASS, n. s. [glaz, glaz, Saxon; glas,
Dutch, as Pezron imagines from glæs,
British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency. To this may be added the Icel. glas, and glia, to shine; Goth.
glaz, light, glaz, to shine. The Cornish
glaz is both green and sky-coloured.]

1. An artificial substance made by infusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass consists from the Belgick and High Dutch; glass from the verb glancan, which signification amongst them to shone; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles.

Procton on Draining.
Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtiler chemical spirits cannot pervade it.

Boyle.
Show's of grandiose rain, by sudden burst
Dislodging murderous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass, and nitrous grain adust.

Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more.
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shows me many more. Shaks. Macbeth.

3. A looking glass; a mirror.

The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils. Isaiah, iii. 23.
That was the mark and glass, copy and look,
That fashion'd others. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meadow light.

Dryden, Horace.

4. An HUNT GLASS. A glass used in mounting time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live.
The running of one glass. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble sonne,
The Golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in. [old Fr. glas, "verre à boire. Ce mot est Celibue, Almand, et Anglais." La-

combe.]
To this last costly treasury,
That swallow'd too much treasure, and like a glass
Did break 't' his rising. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joy, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, bourse
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from wall discerning his present condition.

Sp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
The first glass may pass for health, the second for good humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views.

Milton, P. L.
Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

9. A glass that shews the weight of the air.

A state weather-glass, that, by the rising and falling of a certain magical liquid, presages all changes and revolutions in government, as the common glass does those of the weather.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou dost not. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second finding than those of wood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent, as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.
Methods I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility.

Sidney, Arc. b. ii.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tendering their own worth, from whence
they were glass,

Did point out to buy them, along as you past.

Shakspeare.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie in the small cavities, perhaps glazed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion.

*GLASSBLOWER.* n. s. [glass and blow.]*
One whose business is to blow or fashion
glass.

*GLASSFUL.* n. s. [glass and full.]* As much as is usually taken at once in a glass.

His majesty drank a small glassful of claret wine. Sp. T. Herbert, Memo. of K. Ch. I. p. 133.

GLASSFURNACE. n. s. [glass and furnace.]
A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.]
Finnical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whoreson, glassgazing, finical rogue.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GLASSGRINDER. n. s. [glass and grinder.]
One whose trade is to polish and grind
glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. s. [glass and house.]
A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses.

Addison on Italy.
*GLASSINESS.* n. s. [from glassy.]*
1. The making of glass.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.
2. Smoothness, like glass.

Gum may give the silk a glassiness.
Sir W. Polity, in Spent's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

*GLASSLIKE.* adj. [glass and like.]* Clear;
resembling glass.

By example most we sin'd before,
And glasslike clearness mix'd with frailty bore.

Dryden, Astron. Reduc.
GLASSMAN. n. s. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman.

Swift, Direct. to Servants.
GLASSMETAL. n. s. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let prof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. s. [glass and work.] Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture,
in equal portions, of stones brought from Paria, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
GLASSWORT. n. s. [salsicornia, or saltwort.]
It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these em-bryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the stems, and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp.

From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali,
by the chemists.

Miller.
For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chalk, or glasswort;
and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of bracks or other plants.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near the mountain of Carmel in Judea
there is a sand, which is to others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals find it in turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness, or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As makes the angels weep. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream.

Shakspeare.
The magnet attracted the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose wounds produc'd the glassy ice? Who brave.

The heavy frosts that fall on Winter's head?
Sidney.

The glassy deep. Dryden, Æn.
GLASSY THORN. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in the spring. Miller.

GLAUCOMATA. n. s. [γλαυκός, Gr. glau- come, Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion.

Quincy.
The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

The difference has been eagerly contended for between a glaucoma and a cataract, though indeed latterly the contest has been more violent.

The Student, (1790), t. 341.
*GLAUCOUS.* adj. [glaucus, Lat. γλαυκός,*
Gr.] Grey, or blue.

The leaves are small, of a glaucous colour.

Ray, Rem. p. 192.
The Eak glides over a bottom covered with mosses or coloured stones, that reflect through the pure water tints glaucous green, or myrrhineous.

Brown, Voyage to the Hebrides.
GLAIVE. n. s. [glaiive, French; glaif, a hook, Welsh; probably from the Latin gladius, and uses it in the sense of a lance.

And Cotgrave defines glaive "a lance,
or horseman's staffe." A broad sword;
a falchion; a lance.

Ho, — laying both his hands upon his glaive,
With dreadful strokes let drive at him so sore.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. lit. 27.

Achilles pressing through the Phrygian glines.
Spenar, Hymn on Love.
 Two hundred Greeks came next in sight well try'd,
 Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong.
 But each a glave had pendant by his side. Fairfax.
 Behold from yonder hill the foe appears,
 Bows, bills, glances, arrows, shields, and spears,
 Like a dark wood to come.

Beacon, and Fl. Mod. Lover.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,
 Gave chase to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.
TO GLAVER. † v. n. [glaftr, Welsh, flatter; zhippe, a flatterer, a buffoon, from glipian or glipian, to play the buffoon. Glaver is used in Cheshire for flatter. But it is not a low word, as Dr. Johnson asserts it is; as it can boast much higher authority than that of the solitary example, given by him, from L'Estrange; and may be adopted from the Lat. glaber, smooth.] To flatter; to wheedle.

The writer of that glistering gloss upon Pope Bonifacius bull.

Fuite against Allen, (1586,) p. 512.
 Some slavish, glaving, flattering parasite, or hanger-on.

South, Ser. vi., p. 110.
 Kingdoms have their disempowers, intermissions, and peroxysms, as well as natural light; and a glowering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

GLAVERER. * n. s. [from glaver.] A flatterer.

These glawers gone, my self to rest I laid,
 And doubting nothing soundly fell asleep.

GLAYMORE. * n. s. [Gael. claidhamh, a sword, and more, great.] It is generally pronounced glaymore. Dr. Jamieson.—It may perhaps be referred to the Lat. gladius.] A large two-handed sword, formerly much used by the highlanders of Scotland.

Their arms were anciently the glaymore, or great two-handed sword, and afterwards the two-edged sword and target.

TO GLAZE. † v. n. [To glaze, only accidentally varied. Dr. Johnson.—Chaucer uses glaze, for "to put glass into windows." Our old lexicographer gives "to glass or glaze a window." See Sherwood's Dict.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hang'd, and glaz'd with crystalline glass. Bacon, Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glaiser, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
 Divides one thing entire to many objects.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet it is sound reason that carries the stroke home. Greene, Counc. Rec.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden, Dryden.
GLAZEN. * adj. [from glaze; Sax. glæpan, glazing.] Resembling glass.

A glazen sea mynial with
Wicliffe, Rev. x. 2.

Old glazen-eyes,
 He hath not reach'd his despair yet.

B. Jonson, Fuz.

GLAZIER. n. s. [corrupted from glassier, or glazier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbets, the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier.

Mason, Mech. Ecce.

The detestable glazier, strong returns the bound,
 And giaging sashes on the penhouse round.

Gay, Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
 Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part.

Harte.

GLEAD. * See GLEDE.

GLEAM. † n. s. [Sax. glæm, gleam; "the past participle of ge-leoman, to shine." Mr. H. Tuke. But see also TO GLIMPE.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
 Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
 And conquerors bodic'd with his green,
 Along At banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenar.

At last a gleam
 Of dawning light turn'd slitherward in haste
 His travel'd steps.

Milton, P. L.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
 A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
 Bending to look on me.

Milton, P. L.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
 Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.

Dryden, Aurengzeb.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
 Plays on their shining armor and burnish'd helmets,
 And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Addison, Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
 And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
 But dreadful gleams,
 Fires that glow.

Pope, St. Cecilia's Day.

TO GLEAM. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

The field of iron cast a gleaming brown.
 Observant of approaching day,
 The meek-y'd morn appears, mother of dew,
 At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

Thomson, Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
 And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
 Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

Thomson.

GLEAMING. * n. s. [from gleam.] A sudden shoot of light.

Farwell, ye gleamings of departed peace!
 Shine out your last! Thomson, Spring.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden coruscations of light.

In broken arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
 Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

Pope.

TO GLEAN. † v. a. [Glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from gratum; or, as others think, from glans, an acorn; "primitus enim glans: pro frugibus erant." Nicot, and Junius. Glanier, i. e. glaner, vient de glans, dont on a glanée, glander, et glaner, ramasser du gland; signification, qu'on a dans la suite adaptée à l'action de ramasser le grain resté dans un champ moissonné mot est très ancien dans notre langue." Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth, ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
 He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself.

Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
 To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson, Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,
 If sought, to us unknown, adds to him thus.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

That goodness
 Of pleasing all the land's wealth into one,
 Into your own hands, card'nal, by extorting.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men.

Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
 When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shaly plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wond'ring fear;
 As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
 Drove headlong to their ships, and glen'd the routed rear.

Dryden, Aen.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together.

Lace.

GLEAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
 The gleams of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
 He spoils the sallow.

Dryden, Virg.

GLEANNER. n. s. [from glean.] One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
 Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
 Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.

Thomson.

1. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner in the city is an arrant statesman.

Lace.

GLEANING. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleaming or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaming of grapes when the vintage is done.

Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest.

Atterbury.

GLEBE. † n. s. [Glebe, old French; gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Like this the moory plots, delights in sedge bowers;
 The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers.

Dryden.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
 With herds the pastures through'd, with flocks the hills.

Milton, P. L.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
 If of y'ous blooms the bearing branches load,

Wicliffe, Rev. x. 2.

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day.
Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one is land, commonly called the glebe; another is tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.
Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.
Ascham, Forerun.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.
South.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps, in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In as full bloom, and by a fatal hand,
Soddy diff'nd to our virtuous's holy land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hedges and harvest of the year.
Prior.

GLEDE. v. n. [Sax. glēda; Su. Goth. glada.] Screens in. And so our word was sometimes also written glade. But some think it derived from glide, because the kite glides easily through the air with very little motion of his wings. "Glade, or glad, is a kite in the north of England." Grose.] A kind of hawk.

You shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture.
Dout.

Not a glad, not a vulture, not a falcon, not an eagle, not any bird of prey or rapine.
By. Hall, Henric of the Church.

GLEEF. v. n. [Sax. glif, music; whence gle, gle, glad, mirth, joy. Thus in our oldest lexicography, glee is minstrelsy, lute, music. Pr. Parv. Chaucer uses glee for music. We have thus revived the word in modern times, though Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it, to signify a piece of light vocal music for more than one voice, a kind of catch.]

1. Joy; merriment; gaiety. It anciently signified music played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth house, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.
Spenser, F. Q.

Many wayfower make themselves glee, by teasing the inhabitants; who again forewell not to budge them with perfume. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Is blousculda dead? Farewell thy glee!
No blousculda is now re-er'd for me.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each burly-headed outcast, and day-light free.
Hicrie.

2. A song, sung in parts; a species of catch.

Airs of the most modern cast, fritted into divisions or even loaded with parts as much in sequence as in a catch or a glee.

Mason on Church Music, p. 229.
Who has not seen the advertisements promising a reward to him, who should produce the best catch, canon, or glee?

By. Percy, Ess. on the Eng. Minstrel.

TO GLEE, or GLE. v. n. [Teut. glugen, to look awake. But Dr. Jamieson prefers the Icel. glee, to be purblind.] To squint. This word is in our old dictionaries, and is still used in the north of England.

GLEED. v. n. [Jleb, Sax. from glopan, to glow; Su. Goth. glæd.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement, and without any example. The word is one of our oldest.

Piping hot out of the glede, Chaucer, Mil. Tale.
His armour glyteryche as did a glede.

In heart he brent as any glede.
Lyfgate, Hist. of Troy.

There is veene
Fair Hinnu fall in burning red glodes down,
And from the soll great Troy, Neptunus' town.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

When I stir up those embers to the bottom,
There are found some living glodes, which do both contain fire, and are apt to propagate it.

By. Hall, Occas. Modit.
GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakespeare, Tit. Andronicus.
Nor lacks he gleeful tales, whilst round the nutbrown bowl dais thou.

GLEEK. v. n. [Sax. glæc.] Dr. Johnson notices no other meaning of this word, and gives the following example of the present, which however carries an allusion to the next sense.

1. Musick. [Sax. glæc.] Dr. Johnson notices no other meaning of this word, and gives the following example of the present, which however carries an allusion to the next sense.

Musician. What will you give us?
Peter. No money on my faith; but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
2. A seoff; a joke. [Sax. glæc, mirth, jocularity.]

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?

What, art a murt? Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.
Here Juno, here; but say, I do espy
A pretty catch coming from T'allen's eye.

Beaumont, and F. M. in the Mill.
3. A game at cards. [old French, glie, "nom d'un jeu de cartes." Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

Let her hear up to-day,
Laugh, and keep company, at gleek or crimp.

By. Jonson, Magn. Lady.
A lady once requesting a gentleman to play at gleeks, was refused, but civilly, and upon three reasons: the first, whereof, in answer, said the gentleman, is, I have no money. Her ladyship knew that was so material and sufficient, that she desired him to keep the two other reasons to himself.

Gayton, on D. Quin, p. 14.
TO GLEEK. v. n. [from the Sax. glæc, sport. In the north of England, to gleek is still to deceive.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon; to practise deceits.

I can gleek upon occasion.
Shakespeare, Midw. N. Dream.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. In Scotland it signifies to foul or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

GLEEMAN. n. s. [Sax. glæman, glæman, gleekman, gleekman.] A musician; a minstrel.

Blagebride — a conynge musician, called of the Britons god of glenes.

Fadgyn, Chron. (1553), fol. xxii.
The Anglo-Saxon harpers and glenes were the immediate successors and imitators of the Scandinavian scalds.

By. Percy on the Eng. Minstrel.
Their national love of verse and minstrel was so strongly predominated, that in the place of their old scalds a new rank of poets arose, called glenes or harpers.

Watson, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. I.
TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word; it may be of the same race with glen or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place. Dr. Johnson. — It seems to be the Icel. glæna, Fris. glion, to shine; Gr. γλίσσειν, a star, light.

Those who labour
The sweaty groves, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend suborn steel, and harden gleaming armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.
Prior.

GLEESOME. adj. [from glee.] Full of merriment; joyous.

Glenes hunters, pleased with their sport,
With sacrifices due have thank'd me for it.
W. Browne.

GLEET. v. n. [It is written by Skinner glit, and derived from gliban, Saxon, to run softly. Dr. Johnson. — It is rather from the Icel. glat, glæta, moisture, humour, liquor, from glæc, glætt, glassy.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet.
Huicman, Surgery.

TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone; this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.
Huicman, Surgery.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the mountainous parts of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Chryse, Phil. Prime.
GLEET. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting.
Huicman.

GLEN. n. s. [Gael. glenn; Welsh glyn; Sax. glen, glene.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woe the widow's daughter of the glen.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Can silent glens have charms for thee?
The lonely cot, and russet gown?

By. Percy, Song.
Rough glens, and sudden waterfalls.
T. Watson, Ode VII.

GLENE. n. s. [Fr. glene; Gr. glène.] In anatomy, the cavity or socket of the eye; and also any shallow cavity of bones, into which some other bone is received.

TO GLENT. v. n. [Icel. glenta, divaricare.] To start aside; to look aside. A northern word. Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697, and Craven Dial.

GLEW.† n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

To GLEW.* v. a. [from the noun.] To join; to unite. See To GLUE.

The nobleness of your heart will beat the hearts of your people to you. Arch. Lond. Ser. p. 225.

GLEW'ER.* n. s. [from glue.] One who gluweth papers, parchments, or other thing. See GLUE. Huloet.

GLEW'NESS.* n. s. [from gluey.] Adhesive quality; viscosness. Sherwood.

GLEW'ISH.* adj. [from glue.] Partaking of the nature of glue; viscos; adhesive; as, "glewish matter." Huloet.

GLEW'V.* adj. [from glue.] Adhesive; viscos; glutinous.

They bring no natural stones hewen out of the rock, but artfully made of pure sand by some gluey and unctuous matter knit and incorporated together. Hobbes on Providence, p. 207.

A kind of pitch, which is described by authors as a very gluey thing. Patrick on Gen. xl. 3.

GLIB.† adj. [from glis, Gr. Skinner. By others, from the Lat. levit, smooth, slippery. But is it more probably from the Latin glaber, smooth?]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet, Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slid as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Ardenham.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art To speak and purpose not, since what I will intend, I'll do before I speak. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains; Three genuine tokens of Swift's remain:

And then, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Clibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man; Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB.† n. s. ["In Terconell the hair of their [the Irish] head grows so long and curled, that they goe bare-headed, and are called glis; the women, glibbins." Gainsford's Glory of England, 1618, p. 151.] The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glis; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

Whom when she saw in wretched weeds dis- guis'd,

With hairy glib deform'd, and meager face, — She knew him not. Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 12.

To GLIB.† v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To castrate. This is the only sense of the word which Dr. Johnson notices.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see, To bring false generations: they are coheirs,

And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. To make smooth or glib.

There is a drunken liberty of the tongue, which being once glided with intoxicating liquor, runs wild through heaven and earth.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 20.

I undertook that office, and the tongue of All his flattering prophets glid'd with lies To his destruction. Milton, P. R.

GLI'BLV.† adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Wine so choice, or so delicious, that it went down glidly. Patrick on Eccles. vi. 5.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glidly into a detraction.

Gen. of the Tongue.

GLI'BNES.* n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold The rock. Chapman, Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Gen. of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [gliban, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty valleys, glide The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side, In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden, Æn.

Just before the confines of the wood, The gliding Lethæ leads her silent flood. Dryden, Æn.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove? In those fair fields where sacred glis glides, Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step. Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate The mystic wonders of your silent state. Dryden, Æn.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs May glid it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day? Shakespeare, Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales, Glide under the green wave. Milton, P. L.

He trembled every limb, and felt a smart As if cold steel had glid through his heart. Dryden, Fab.

All things are bebold as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself, Who, with her head gimbled in threats, approach'd The opening of his mouth; but suddenly Spring Orlando, it untuck'd itself, And with indentured glides did slip away Into a bush. Shakespeare, As you like it.

GLI'DER.† n. s. [from glide.]

1. That which glides.

The glance into my heart did glide; Hye, ho, the glider; Therewith my soul was sharply glide, Such wounds soon waxen wide. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. In the north of England, a share.

GLIFF.* n. s. [perhaps from the Icel. glia, to shine. See GLANCE.] A transient view; a glimpse; still used in the north of England.

GLIKE. n. s. [glix, Saxon; See GLEEK.] A sneer; a scoff; a fount. Not now in use.

To GLIME.* v. n. "Glimps and glimes, signifies to look cunningly." Praise of Yorksh. Ale. To look out at the corner of the eye; to glance slyly. Brockett's N. C. Words.

To GLIMMER.† v. n. [glimmer, Danish; to shine; glimra, Goth. to shine; glimbra, Icel. the same, from glimbr, splendour; glimma, Teut. to glow, to flame: from the Goth. gla, light. See GLEAM.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out. — And on my side it is so well appear'd, So clear, so shining, and so evident, That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Oh in glimmering bowers and glades He met her. Milton, II. Psa.

See't thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild, The seat of desolation, void of light, Save what the glimmering of these livid flames Caste pale and dreadful? Milton, P. L.

The sacred influence Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n Shouts far into the bosom of dim night A glimmering dawn. Milton, P. L.

Through those sad shades this chaos in my soul, Some seeds of light at length began to roll;

The rising motion of an infant ray Shot glim'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies; Or smother'd in the glim'ring sockets lies. Gray, Trivia.

When yore morning glimmed o'er the dales, He drove to pasture all the lusty mule. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

GLIMMER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

I yet bask my night of life some memory, My wasteful lamps seem fading glimmers left. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Hoodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic; tale, cat'spaw, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Hoodward.

GLIMMERING.* n. s. [from glimmer.] Faint or imperfect view.

On the way the laggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering of what they were. Wotton.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

I cannot see a glimmering of distinction. Burke on the Popery Laws.

To GLIMPSE.* v. n. [from glimmer; to be not as other world than that; if creature uses it substantively. "Ye have some glimping, and no parist sight." March. Tale. However, it is to be referred, like glimmer and gleam, to the Goth. gla, light; while it also resembles the Gr. glauos, glauos, to shine, and Icel. liomr, light, from the same root.] To appear by glimpses.

Deformed shadows glimping in his sight. Dryden, Barons' Wars, ii. 46.

R E

GLIMPSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton, P. L.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimmers they ran.
Milton, P. L.
My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fancies, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimmer was gone,
My pride struck out new sparks of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimmer of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.
Man he seems
To all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimmers of his Father's glory shine. Milton, P. L.

If I, celestial sire, in ought
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimmer of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden, Fae.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Nee satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If hap'ly be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimmer discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade.
Milton, P. L.
Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world,
That we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hawes.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much as one glimmer as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I to? while here I was certain'd,
No glimpse of godlike life remain'd.

Dryden, Virg.
6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.

Shakespeare.

To GLIMMER. v. n. [not from glitten,
German, which Dr. Johnson adduces, but perhaps from gleissen in that language; though the Sax. glīman is to shine; and our own word was formerly gliesen. I find it in use nearly a century before the time of Thomson, from whom
Dr. Johnson's earliest example is cited.]
To shine, to sparkle with light.

How unpolished over this diamond be, yet if it do but glimmer, 'tis too precious to be cast away.
Hannford, Works, iv. 660.

The blessing kind
Eye the blank heaven, and next the gleaming earth,
With looks of dumb desire. Thomson, Winter.
The ladies' eyes glimmered with pleasure.
Richardson, Pamela.

To GLITTER. v. n. [Teut. glitteren, glitteren; Sw. glittra.] To shine; to be bright.

The wavy flame most in summer, and the bel-most glister brightest in the fairest sunshine.

Spenner on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiac in his glister'ing coach. Shaksp.
All that glitters is not gold.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall.

R. Jonson, Underwoods.
When the sun shews upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered thereby, shined like lamps of fire. Mac. vi. 59.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant reddish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLITTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre;
glitter. Dr. Janieson notices this word as a Scottish substantive, but says that he had never observed it as an English
one. It, however, exists.

As fair Aurora in her morning gray,
Deck'd with the ruddy glister of her love,
Is fair Samela. Greene, Descript. of Samela, Arcad. (1610.)

GLISTER. n. s. [Properly written clyster, from κλύω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong, even by Brown.

Now enters Bush, with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily into the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from To glitter.]
Brightly; splendidly. Sherwood.

GLIT. v. See GLEET.

To GLITTER. v. n. [Goth. glitmanjan;
Icel. glitra; Sw. glitra.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Before the battle joins, from afar,
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.

Dryden, Virg.

Scarcely hadst thou time to unsheathe thy con-qu'ring blade.

It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Cromwell.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Dennis of Pietry.

In glister'ing scenes, o'er her own heart, we've;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLITTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall

Was left him, or false glister. Milton, P. L.

Flourish not too much upon the glister of fortune,
for fear there should be too much alloy in it.

Cotton on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such point and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLITTERING. Shining; sparkling.
A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

Bells of glitterand gold. Spenner, Shep. Cal.

GLITTERING. n. s. [from glitter.] Lustre;

gleam.

Steel glasses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.] Ra-diantly; with shining lustre. Sherwood.

To GLOAM. v. n. [perhaps from the Germ. glam, turbid.] To be sullen; to be melancholy. See To GLOOM.

Woman, pluck up your heart, and leave off all this gloaming. Gomara Gorton's Noelle, (1551.)

To GLOAR. v. a. [gloeren, Dutch; glora, Cimbr.]

1. To aquint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare; as, "what a gloarand quean." Dr. Johnson.—It is also used, in the north of England, in the same sense; and it occurs in our old lexicography. "To gaze and glore." Barret in V. GAZE. See also the Lancashire and Westmoreland Dialects, and other northern vocabularies.

To GLOAT. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar. Dr.
Johnson.—It is not so; but may be from the Swedish glutta, "leviter vel furtin inspicere." Serenius; having indeed the same origin as gloar, viz. gloa, Goth, to look attentively. To gloat, or glore, is in our old lexicography. See Sherwood and Cole's Dict.] To cast side glances, as a timorous lover, Dr.
Johnson says; but it is rather to stare with admiration, eagerness, or desire.

Teach every gaze to unite in your behalf,
And her delecting eyes to gloat for you.

Rome, John Shere.

Some praise his sleeves; and others gloat
Upon his rich embroider'd coat. Gay, Fables.

GLOBARD. n. s. [from globo.] A glow-worm.

GLOBATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spherical.

GLOBE. n. s. [globe, French; globus,
Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body; a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal empire betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Sepmyer.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of dissimilar globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleveland.

These are the stars,

But raise thy thought from senses, nor think to find

Such figures there as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery seraphim enclod'd,
With bright imbratory, and horrent arms. Milton, P. L.

GLORE. Amaranth, or everlasting flower. n. s.

[ama ranthoides.] A flower. Miller.

GLOBE Daisy. n. s. A kind of flower.

GLOBE Fish. n. s. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE Ranunculus. n. s. [heliolepis-ranunculus]. A plant. Müller.

GLOBE Thistle. n. s. [carduus orbiculatus]. A plant. Müller.

To GLOBE* v. a. [Lat. globo]. To gather round together.

Although I have given it the name of a liquid thing, yet it is not incontinent to bound itself, as humid things are, but hath in it a most restraining and powerful abstinence to start back, and globe itself upward from the mixture of any ungenerous and unbecoming motion, or any soil wherewith it may peril to stain itself.

Milton, Rosa of Ch. Gen. li. 3.
GLOBOSE* adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea, from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton, P. L.

There flourish'd the moon
Globe, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milt. P. L.
GLOBOSITY. n. s. [from globosus] Sphericity; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, is seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, till at last it appears not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS* adj. [globosus, Lat.; globosus, French.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globeus, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected. Dr. Johnson.—The word in the following passage of Milton is not globeus, as Dr. Johnson pretends, and as he has cited it; but is, in the poet's own edition of his immortal poem, globous. Spherical; round.

Having reduced [it] into a globeus form.
Gregory, Pastorum (1650), p. 282.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globeus earth in plain outspread,
Such are the courts of God! Milton, P. L.
The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globeus iron fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR* adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Greer, Cum. Sabra.
GLOBULARIA. n. s. [Latin; globulaire, French.] A fuscous flower. Müller.

GLOBULE. n. s. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Newton, Optics.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globules, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS* adj. [from globulus]. In form of a small sphere; round.
The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

GLOB'NY* adj. [from globe]. Orbicular; round. Sherwood.

Your hair, whose globy rings
He flying curls, and crispeth with his wings. B. Jonson, Elegy.

One of the highest arcs, that human contemplation circling upwards can make from the glory sea whereon she stands.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.
GLOBE* The old preterite of To glide.

Forth upon his way he glode,
As sparkle out of brocade. Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

She glode forth as an adder doth
Cover, Conf. Am. B. 5.
Like sparks of fire that from the anvile glode. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 23.

To GLOMERATE* v. a. [glomerare, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 68.
GLOMERATION. n. s. [glomeratio, Latin.] 1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOMEROUS* adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM* n. s. [gloomung, Saxon, twilight. Dr. Johnson.—Rather perhaps from the German glum, turbid. Yet Mr. H. Tooke deduces gloom from the Sax. gleoman, to shine, the very reverse of its meaning. See his Div. of Purley, li. 373.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dimness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Mt. II Pica.

In this seat,
That we must change for heaven? This mournful gloom,
For that celestial light? Milton, P. L.

The still night; not now, as ere man fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompanied: with damps, and dreadful gloom. Milton, P. L.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness.

To GLOOM* v. n. [from the noun.] 1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight.

This sense is not now in use.
His glistering armour made
A little glooming light much like a shade. Spenser, F. Q.

Scarcely had Phobus in the glooming East
Yet harnessed his fiery-footed team. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

Through dreadful shades of even glooming night. Spenser, Faerydy, (1607).

3. To be melancholy; to be sullen. See To GLOAM. "To gloom, is to frown and be sullen." Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697.

4. To look darkly or dismally.

Here will the proud their long-drawn pomps display,
There the black gibbet glooms beside the way. Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

To GLOOM* v. a. To fill with gloom, with darkness, or dismalness.

A night that glooms us in the noontide ray,
And wears our thoughts at banquet in the shroud. Young, Night Thoughts, 2.

Good heaven! what sorrow glooms d that parting day,
That call'd them from their native walks away. Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

GLOOM'ILY* adv. [from gloom]. 1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dismally.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryden, Gloomily retir'd.

The villain spider lives. Thomson, Summer.

GLOOMINESS* n. s. [from gloom]. 1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness. Isaiah, li. 5.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humours, and makes them grow sullen and unconquerable. Coffier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy. Addison.

GLOOM'NY* adj. [from gloom]. 1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomy shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton, P. L.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whom gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor seating visits, nor the lightest moon. Dryden, Fob.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Type, Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,
Herself a fairer flow'r fit, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

And you, ye hopeless gloomy-minded tribe,
You who, unconscious of those airy flights
That reach impatient at immortal life,
Against the prime enduring privilege
Of being dare contend. Thomson on Sir Isaac Newton.

To GLO'PEN* v. a. To surprise; to astonish. Common throughout the north. Westm. Chesh. and Craven Dialects. Supposed to be from the Icel. glöpn, stultus.

GLORE* adj. [claire, a very fat fish; whence hydre-feit, extremely fat. Sere.]

nus. But see also GLORE. † Fat; as, "glor fat, very fat." Yorksh. Gloss. to the Praise of Yorkshire Ale. "Glor, fat." North. Glar, soft fat. Lancashire. Pegge.

GLORIATION. * n. s. [old French, gloriation, Latin, glorior, from glorior, to glory; to boast.] Boast; triumph.

Mutual praises, gloriation, and congratulations.

Rp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 338.
Suspicion, peremptory, dependency, triumph or gloriation. Mors. Corp. Cato. p. 211.

How were the Jews puffed up with that vain gloriation, that they were the sons of Abraham.

Rp. Hall, Item. p. 141.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not now in use.

Old respect,

As I suppose, towards your once glorious friend,
My son, now captive, rather hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age
Came lagging after. Milton, s. 41.

GLO'RIIFICATION. n. s. [glorification, Fr.; from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Rp. Taylor.

To GLO'RIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Ps. lxxvi. 9.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most heartless of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spencer on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odorous tincture, or medicinal. Dunne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. St. John, xiii. 32.

Whom he justified then he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The members of the church eternally being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified, then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Attyff's Parergon.

GLO'RIOUS. † adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal judgment. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He never defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison, Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst them that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

2. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious. Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.
They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all unvary stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

We have now
Received into our bosom and our grace
A glorious lazy drone, grown fat with feeding
On others' toil, but an industrious bee. Messinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

GLO'RIOUSLY. † adv. [from glorious.]

1. Nobly; splendidly; illustriously. He hath triumphed gloriously. Exod. xv. 1.
They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.

2. Ostentatiously; boastingly.

I protest to you, signior, I speak it not gloriously, nor out of affection.

R. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

GLO'RIOSUS. * n. s. [from glorious.] The state or quality of being glorious.

GLO'RY. † n. s. [old French, glorie, and glor; afterwards, gloire; from gloria, Latin. Among the old poets, both English and Scottish, it was used sometimes as one syllable, glor.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. St. Luke, ii. 14.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psalm lxxiii. 24.
Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton, P. L.

It is hardly possible for you to be weary and inconstant of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

And with that word and warning soon was light,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Feifeis.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea? Barnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. St. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Wallis.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison, Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope, Winter.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures.

It is not a converging but a crowning glory, such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South, Sermon.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Cotton of the Asper.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Ward, xv. 14.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to contribute. Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. 2. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgement glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whilom Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius latter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hodder.

Let them look they glory vain mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood will cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorifying is not good. Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas
While storms and tempests thunder on it brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height.

This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison, Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity.

Richardson, Christian.

To GLOSS.† v. n. [Sax. gleran, to glōze.] To flatter; to colloquy. See To GLOZE.

GLO'SER.* n. s. [from glose.]

1. A commentator.

Sophisters, and doctors, and legends, and glosses.
Hp. of Chichester, Sermon, (1376), sign. C. v.

2. A flatterer; a deceiver. See GLOZER.
GLOSS.† n. s.

1. A scholium; a comment. [Gr. γλῶσσα; Icel. gloss; Fr. glose.]

They never bear sentence which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word presched, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach, With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flattering gloss, but nature's speech,

Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Hovell.

All this, without a gloss or comment, He could finish in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places, he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into plainness and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden, Fob. Pref.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern; Their glosses teach as age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accurisy's method. Baker on Learning.

Industrious, cov'nants, arise, they draw, Large as the fields themselves, and larger far, Than civil ends with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense, it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glaze. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Goth. gloa, to shine; whence glassa, and thence our glaze, and glass.

His iron coat all o'er grown with rust, Was underneath enveloped with gold, Whose glittering glaze darken'd with filthy dust. Spenser, F. Q.

You are a sectary, That's the plain truth: your painted glaze discovers, To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people, Which would be worn in their nextest glaze.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glasses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss The virgin wore; the youths, worn coats, that cast a faint dim glaze, Like that of oil. Chapman, Hind.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a glaze to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first glaze upon them. Addison, Spect.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join, To fill the world with strange but vain conceits: One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin, Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer glaze than the naked truth does afford. Hooker, Pref.

He seems with forged guilt conceit To set a glaze upon his bad intent. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The common glaze Of theologians. Milton, P. L.

To GLOSS.† v. n. [glosser, from the noun. Dr. Johnson. — Glosser, in the sense of comment, is of no great use in the French language. V. Lacombe. "Glossé, noté, 1450." The Sax. gleran, is both to comment and to flatter.]

1. To comment.

Of a beautiful countenance; or, had beautiful eyes; — as Coaradas Pellicanus here glosses.

Thou detain'st Brivies in thy bands, By priestly glazing on the gods' commands. Dryden, Fob.

2. To make sly remarks. Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal, And laughing glaz'd that, Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment. In parchment then, large as his fields, he draws Assurances, big as glaz'd civil laws. Dante, Poems, p. 124.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation. Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glazing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker, Sermon.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct? You have the heart to glaze the foulest cause? Philips, Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre. But thou, who lately of the common strain, Wert one of us, if still thou dost remain, The same ill habits, the same follies too, Glaz'd o'er only with a saintlike show, Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden, Pers.

GLOSSARIAL.* adj. [from glossary.] Relating to a glossary; as, a glossarial index, i. e. an index referring to words explained in a work, as in the late editions of Shakespeare.

GLOSSARIST.* n. s. [from glossary.]

1. One who writes a gloss or commentary. This seems not to be proper.

The glossary I take to be Philip de Bergamo, a prior at Padua, who wrote a most elaborate normalization on Cato. Warton, Hist. E. P. i., 169.

2. One who writes a dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

Mr. J. Kersey — with laudable industry has collected almost all the old words, I believe, which are to be found either in Spenser or Skinner, and has generally with much fidelity copied the interpretations assigned to them by those two glossarists. Tyrrhiti, Tragic, Bentley Centur., p. 169.

GLOSSARY. n. s. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delectum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum delectum est, and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary.

GLOSSA'TOR.* n. s. [glossatore, French; from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator. Baker.

The Jewish doctors understood the text better than Gratian, or John Bemars his glossator. Bayle, Rem., p. 298.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgement, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

All this is related by Aldred, the Saxon glossator, at the end of St. John's Gospel. Warton, Hist. E. P. i., Diss. i.

GLO'SSER.† n. s. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator. Neither the glosses upon the Alcoran, nor the most authentic legend of his life, take any notice thereof. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, (1675), p. 62.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. s. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLO'SSIST.* n. s. [from gloss.] A writer of glosses.

It was raised by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text. Milton, Tetrachordon.

GLOSSO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

The like whereto is found also in the canon law, and noted by the glossographer.

Some [words] I believe may pose the ablest glossographer now living. Blount, Anc. Ten. Pref.

GLOSSO'GRAPHY. n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLO'SSY.† adj. [from gloss.]

1. Shining; smoothly polished. There came towards us a person of a place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camelot, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy scarf. Milton, P. L.

His surcoat was a beak on his back; His hair hung long behind, a glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home, For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden, Virg.

2. Specious.

That Lord Chesterfield must have been mortified by the lofty countenance, and polite yet keen satire, with which Johnson exhibited him to himself in this letter, it is impossible to doubt. He, however, with that glossy duplicity which was his constant study, affected to be quite unconcerned. Burwell, Life of Johnson.

GLO'TTIS.* n. s. [Gr. γλῶττις.] In anatomy, a cleft or chink in the larynx, serving for the formation of the voice: it is in the form of a little tongue.

The glottis, — reckoned among the cavities before mentioned — is the principal instrument of modulation. Smith, on Old Age, p. 142.

Letting it pass promiscuously from the upper part of the glottis, along the roof of the mouth.

GLOVE.† n. s. [glōffue, Saxon, from klōffue, Danish, to divide; klōffue, Su. Goth. the same. This brings it near to our own word cleave. Junius says that the glove, in Danish, is called haand-kloffer, because it splits and divides the hand. Others think it to be from the Gr. καλύβω, to hide or cover; or κλύω, the third or shell of any thing. The word is old in our language: "I wote these gyfte both goodle and gloves." Romance of The Sowdon of Babyloyne, written, according to Mr. Steevens, before the year 1375.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff I the wind; }
For haste some left their masks behind. }
Some could not stay their gloves to find. }

Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

TO GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,

Weak'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly giantist now, with joints of steel,
Must glee this hand. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That ain't her of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once renewed;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. s. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shaks. Mer. W. of Windsor.

TO GLOVE.* See TO GLOAR: which is in some places pronounced glour or glower.

TO GLOVE.† v. n. [A low word, of which I find no etymology. Dr. Johnson. —
It is by no means a low word. Better writers than Chapman and Garth, whom Dr. Johnson cites, use it, both as a neuter and active verb. And it is, like glour, and glow, descended from the Goth. gloa, to behold.] To pout;
to look sultry. It is still used in Scotland.
She larks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her oaks,
Where, glowering round her rock, to fish she falls.

Chapman.

That feast of love and heavenly-admired friendship, the seat of filial grace, became the subject of horror and glowering admiration, paginated about like a dreadful idol. Milton, Of Reform. B. 1.

Glowering, with sullen spirit, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look.

Goth.

TO GLOVE.* v. a. To gaze; to view attentively.

His majesty — knew full well — that whoever attempted any thing for the publick, (especially if it pertain to religion, and to the opening and clearing of the Word of God,) the same seteth himself upon a stage to be glowed upon by every evil eye.

Treatisers of the Bible to the Reader, 1611.

TO GLOW.† v. n. [Gloapen, Sax. gloeyen, Dutch, gloa, Icel. to shine; Gael, and Welsh, glo, a live coal.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But silence lessenseth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser, F. Q.

His goodly eyes.

That o'er the files and mountains of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a twinkling front.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing iron one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill on Providence.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire.

Milton, P. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The scorching steels, when from their nostrils flows
The scuttled fire that in their entrails glows.

Addison, Critic.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow.

Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe.

3. To feel heat of body.
Did not his temples glow
To the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison, Cato.

The cord glides swiftly through his glowing hands.

Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.
With a smile that glow'd
Celestial ray red, love's proper hue.

Milton, P. L.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays.

Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage

A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee, Æthiops from the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;

Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost.

Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.

Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow.

Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god.

Pope.

Each pleasing blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow.

Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain,
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love.

Addison, Cato.

For'd compliments and formal bows
Will show the rest just above sight;

The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect.

Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire.

Prior.

Let the gay consciousness of a life well spent
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face.

Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows.

Pope.

Amidst Rhodope's snows,
So peris all whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For other's good, or melt at other's woe.

Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard.

Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.
A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms long.

Shadwell.

TO GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To blow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Shining heat.

2. Vehement passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.

Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds displays,
Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and sparkle of a Paul, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken.

Raynolds.

TO GLOWER.* See TO GLOOM.

GLOWINGLY.* adv. [from the part. glow-
ing.]

1. In a shining manner; brightly.
A little storm there may be to alloy him; he would grow too rank else: a small eclipse to shadow him; but out he must break glowingly
again, and with a greater lustre.

Beaumont and Fl. W. without Money.

2. With passion; with admiration, love, or desire.

GLOWWORM. n. s. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The yellow bags steal from the humble bee,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.

Shakespeare.

The glowworm shows the matins to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shaks. Hamlet.

A great light-tapers crowd their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.

Shakespeare.

The glowworm shows the matins to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shaks. Hamlet.

A great light-tapers crowd their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.

Shakespeare.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He held it dear, till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away.

Walter.

TO GLOZE.† v. n. [Glozan, Saxon. One of our oldest words. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it in the sense of flatter;
by whom it is written glase.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to flawn.

For he could well his glowing speeches frame,
Spenser, F. Q. li. viii. 14.

Man will hearken to his glowing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton, P. L.

So glad of the tempter, and his promiscuous
Into the heart of Eve his words made way.

Milton, P. L.

A false glazing parasite would call his foolhardiness, valour, but then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass.

South.

Now for a glowing speech.
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.

Pindar.

2. To comment. This should be glaze.
Which Salique land the French unjustly gave
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare, Hen. I.

TO GLOZE.† v. a. To palliate by specious exposition. See TO GLOSS.
But it is often pronounced and written,
in this sense, glaze.

GLOZE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glores by.

Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious cushions full of are shaken with a fever;
If then a bodily ail in a bodily glare be not hidden,
Shall such morning dew be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney.

GL'ZER.† n. s. [from gloze.] A flatterer;
"a liar." Hulot.

Yet must I talk so sage and smooth, as though
I were a glozer. Gosse. Curzon's Needle, (1851).
I may not use the glozer's trade;

I cannot say the gloze is white,
But needs must call a spade a spade.

Gifford, Poets of Giltflowers, (1880).

GL'ZING.† n. s. [from gloze.] Specious representation.

Your goodly glazings and time-serving collu-sions with the state are but like watermen on the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way.

Manning, App. to Cæsar, p. 43.

GLUE. n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glut, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dy-and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was said by one of the ancients, of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best.
Moran.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts excreting glue diffuse.

Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To GLUE v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow

More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue'd me thus to thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glue'th
a posther together. Eccles. xiii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glue'd to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air,
the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Dredman.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glue'd together by rest; that is by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton, Opticks.

3. To join; to unite; to invincate.

Those wounds to a honey-pot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glue'd to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts do delude men's minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that she had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:

Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue'd
Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd.

Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glow my claspings run.

Pope.

GLU'BOILER. n. s. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to glue glue.

GLU'ER.† n. s. [from glue.] One who cements with glue. See also GL'WER.

GLU'ZY.† adj. See GLEWY, and GLUY.

GLU'YNESS.† See GLEWINES.

GLU'ISH.† adj. Partaking of the nature of glue. See also GLEWISH. Sherwood.

To GLUM.† v. n. [from gloom; formerly written glomb. Dr. Johnson notices only the adjective glum, which he calls a low cant word, and for the usage of which he cites the comparatively modern authority of the Guardian. For glum is both a verb, and a substantive, in our ancient writers.] To look sourly; to be sour of countenance. Hulot.

It is of Love, as of Fortune,
Which whilom will on folk smile,
And glum on him another while.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 4356.

GLUM.† n. s. Sullenness of aspect; a frown.

She looked haughty, and gave on me a glum;
There was among them no word then but mum.

Shelton, Poems, p. 44.

GLUM.† adj. Sullen; stubbornly grave.
It is used, in some places, for melancholy, dull; and, like the old adjective glummy, is adopted from gloom. See GLOOM.

Some when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.

GLUM'MY.† adj. [from glum, i. e. gloom.]
Dark; dismal for want of light.

Such casual blasts may happen, as are most to be feared, when the weather wasteth dark and glummy. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1880), fol. 27.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio,
Lat. to swallow; γλῦν, Gr.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

Till cramm'd and gorg'd with high burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton, P. L.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Dendron.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,

He may look propitious on our tears,
And hungry gaves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden, Æn.

The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Coddem'd eternal changes to pursue,

Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Turn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.

Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight

With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retelling too much of a bad commodity at once.

Arbuthnot, Art of Politic Lying.

5. To saturate.

The menses, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging food

Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton, P. L.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

No death

Shall be deced'd his glut; and with us two
He forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton, P. L.

Let him but see the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A great study and retirement in the first part of my life, came into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. B. Jenon, Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means arrested in their passage. Woodward.

To GLUTINATE.† v. a. [Lat. glutino.]

To join with glue; to cement. Bailey.

GLUTINATION.† n. s. [from glutinate.]

The act of joining with glue. Bailey.

GLUTINATIVE.† adj. [from glutinate.]

Tenacious. See AGGLUTINATIVE and CONGLUTINATIVE.

GLUTINOSITY.† n. s. [Fr. glutinosité.]

Glutinousness; clamminess. Cotgrave.

GLUTINOUS.† adj. [glutineux, French;
from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous;
tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and number. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat,

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS.† [n. s. from glutinous.]

Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON.† n. s. [glouton, French;
gluto, Lat. from glutido, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to eat catfish baked.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
While the vile glutton gnaws on;

And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bubo's endless drought. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat,

he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy and covetous tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Low.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;

All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty fawns the glutton love.

Conkey.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy.
Their fatal arts so insidiously employ. Granville.
5. A species of bear. Pennant.

To GLUTTON.* v. a. [from the noun.] To load; to glut; to overfill.

Then after all your fooling, fat, and wine,
Glutton'd at last, return at home to pine.

To GLUTTON.* v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

Sherwood.

And again, of vepi the glutton Zeus—the material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the nidours and blood of sacrifices.

Hallswell, Melanopora (1691.) p. 107.

GLUTTONOUS.* adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,

And take down th' interest in their gluttonous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdew, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Ralegh.

Well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no gluttonous deligh.

Milton, P. L.

GLUTTONOUSLY.* adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

Sherwood.

GLUTTONY.* n. s. [gluttonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holmes.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantic stone, Milton, P. R.

Well may they fear some miserable cud,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend.

Dryden, Juv.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUCY.* adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamic mixture, because it is a gley spongy matter. Hiercy on Consumption.

With gley was some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden, Ann. Minch.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gley or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grette. Addison.

GLYCOSIAN.* v. a. [Fr. glycosien, glycosien, glycosien; v. a. conique; from the Lat. glyconium.] Denoting a kind of verse in Greek and Latin poetry.

He (Watts) was a maker of verses from fifteen to fifty, and in his youth appears to have paid attention to Latin poetry. His verses to his brother, in the glyconic measure, written when he was seventeen, are remarkably easy and elegant. Johnson, Life of Watts.

GLYNN.* n. s. [Irish; glenn, Norm. Fr. a valley; glyn, Cornish, a woody valley; gleann, glyn, pl. Erse; glen, Scottish. See GLENN.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did slay them up within those narrow corners and glens under the mountain-foot. Smyser, State of Ireland.

GLYPH.* n. s. [Fr. glyphe; Gr. γλυφω; from γλυφω, to engrave.] In sculpture or architecture, any kind of ornamental cavity. Chambers.

GLYPHICK.* n. s. [from γλυφω.] A picture or figure, by which a word was implied; usually hieroglyphick. See HEROGLYPHICK. But glyphicks is in the Hist. of Peru, p. 43.

GLYPHICK.* n. s. [Fr. glyptique; Gr. γλυφω, from γλυφω, to engrave.] The art of engraving figures on precious stones.

GLYPHOGRAPHICK.* adj. [γλυφω, and γραφω, Gr.] Describing the methods of engraving figures on precious stones.

Brit. Crit. vol. 10. 1797. Oct.

GLYPHOGRAPHY.* n. s. [γλυφω, and γραφω; Fr. glyptographie.] A description of the art of engraving upon gems.

The general prolegomena are followed by the author's introduction to glyptography, (l'étude des pierres gravées), in which he shows himself to be a person who has not derived his information merely from the descriptions given by others, and from books of prints, but from the actual contemplation of the originals themselves.

Brit. Crit. vol. 10. 1797. Oct.

To GNAR.* v. n. gnar, Sax.; gnor, To GNARL.* v. n. gnar, Sax.; gnor, Goth. to murmur; knurra, Icel. the same.]

To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

He ran to rear his bristles strong,
And fell gnor, until day's enemy

Did him appraise. Spenser, F. Q.

Thus is the shepherd beaten from the side,
And wolves are gnorling who shall gnaw thee first.

Shakespeare.

Gnoring sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and says it light.

The gnoring porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies wale their sovereign spoke.

Farfice.

GNAR.* n. s. A knot. See GNARLED.
GNARLED.* adj. [gnar, war, or war, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with a stick. Dr. Johnson.—GNAR, as a hard knot of wood, is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it. It is also in our old lexicography. See Bullukar and Cockermar. It is from the Teut. gnorric. See likewise KNARE.] Knotty.

Meerciful heav'n!
Thus rather with thy sharp and sultry bolt
Split'st the unweildable and guarded oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Mens. for Mens.

To GNASH.* v. a. [gnaschen, Dutch; gnasta, Icelandic; and our own word at first was gnast. Wicliffe uses gnastide for gnashed; and nearly two centuries after him, bi-lup Fisher, in his Psalms:—
“They gnaste with their teeth.”
To strike together; to clash.

Laugh not with him, lest thou have sorrow with him, and lest thou gnash thy teeth in the end. Eccles. xxx. 10.

The weer, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
Roll'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden, Virg.

To GNASH.* v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.

He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms cxli. 10.

2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.

His great horn with it still did grind,
And grimly gnash'd, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser, F. Q.

They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms xxv. 16.

Let her taste of most terrible punishments,
To find himself not matches. Milton, P. L.

With boiling rage Atrides burn'd,
And foam betwixt his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden.

GNASHING.* n. s. [from gnash.] Collision of the teeth in rage or pain.

Let her taste of most terrible punishments,
Sorrowful plagues, waylones, and gnashings of teeth. Rule on the River (1850.) P. iii.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. St. Matt. viii. 12.

4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.

5. To pick with the teeth.

His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw.
Dryden.

To GNAW. v. n. To exercise the teeth. It is now used actively.

I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty.
Sidney.

See the hell of having a false woman; my bed shall be shrouded, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnaw'd at.
Shakespeare.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon.
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GNAWER.† n. s. [from gnaw.] One that gnaws.

Plautus calls him (the backbiter) "onus nominis," a mouse (that is the gnawer, or eater up) of one's good name.

Ep. Andrews on the Dec. (ed. 1650.) p. 507.

To GNIABLE.* See To NIBBLE. Gnidible, however, is the old orthography.

GNOFF.* n. s. [perhaps of the same origin with chuff. See CHUFF.] Bullokar and Cockerham define a gnoff to be a churl.† A miser.

A rich gnoff, i. e. a rich grub, or miserable catfish, as I render it; which interpretation, to be proper and significant, I gather by the sense of that ancient proverb.

The catfish gnoff, and to his cue,
My money is many, my incomes but few.
Comm. upon Chaucer's Mill. Tale, &c. (1665.) p. 8.

GNOME.* n. s. [Gr. γνῶμη.]
1. A brief reflection, worthy to be remembered.

Gnome [in] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declareth, by an apt brevity, what in this our life ought to be done or not done.

Proschon, Gloss. of Elog. (1577.) sign. V. iii.

2. One of those invisible people, who are fabled to inhabit the inner parts of the earth, and to fill it to the centre. [Fr. gnome. Vigenere calls them also gnomons; and some derive the word from the Gr. γνῶμη, one that takes cognizance of a thing.]

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief still on earth to roam.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

The laughters gave out, that the gnomes and nymphe, disguised like ruffians, had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the caldæ; a crime not to be pardoned by these jealous spirits!

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

GNOMICAL.* adj. [Fr. gnomique, from γνῶμη, a sentence.] Sententious; containing maxims or reflections.

Adding this excellent, gnomical, and canonical conclusion.

Conference at Hampton Court, (1603.) p. 44.

GNOMOLOGICAL.* adj. [from gnomological.] Pertaining to gnomology.

Which art of powerful reclaiming wits men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomologies.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

GNOMON. n. s. [γνῶμων.] The hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south pole.

There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day.
Brown.

GNOMONICK.* adj. [from gnomon.]
GNOMONICAL.* Pertaining to the art of dialling.

The gnomonick projection is also called the horologigraphick projection, because it is the foundation of dialling.
Chambers.

GNOMONICKS. n. s. pl. [γνῶμονικαί.] A science which makes a part of the mathematics: it teaches to find the just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by its means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile, that throws off the shadow for this purpose.
Trevcan.

GNOSTICISM.* n. s. [from Gnostick.] The heresy of the Gnosticks.

Though it be indeed but a spice of the old abhorred Gnosticism.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

GNOSTICK.* n. s. [old French, gnostique, Greek γνῶστικός, from γινῶσκω, to know.] One of the earliest heretics.

I think that no man that reads it [the first Epistle of St. John] with attention, can doubt but that it is particularly designed against the impious sect of the Gnosticks; who, as the fathers tell us, sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary knowledge and illumination; from whence they had the name of Gnosticks; but notwithstanding this glittering pretence, they did all themselves in all manner of impious and vicious practices; "turning the grace of God into lasciviousness," as St. Jude speaks of them.
Tilston, Sermon. vol. i. s. 15.

GNOSTICK.* adj. Relating to the heresy of the Gnosticks.

The Nicolaitans, of whom mention is made in the Apocalypse of St. John, seem to have been of the Gnostick sect.
Percy, Key to the N. Test.

To GO.† v. n. pret. I went; I have gone. [γὰν, Sax. This was probably changed to gone, or gang, then contracted to go. Went is the preterite of the old verb wend. Dr. Johnson.—Go, goen, and gon are the ancient past participles of this verb. The Icelandic, Su. Gothick, and Dan. ga, to go, must be likewise observed in the etymology. Some refer to the Greek verb also, πάω, to go.]

1. To walk; to move step by step.

You know that love

Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp.

Ex. xxiii. 27.

The sun, which once did shine alone,

Hung down his head, and waded for night,

When he beheld twelve suns for one

Going about the world, and giving light. Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,

As if they had been there as servants set,

To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,

And not pursue, but wait on his retreat.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

Turn not children going, 'till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of.

Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as that river.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot.

Swift, Disc. to the Footman.

Those who come for gold will go off with power and brass, rather than return empty.

Swift.

11. To pass in company with others.

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

Jer. xxi. 4.

Away, and with thee go, the worst of woes,

That seek't my friendship, and the gods thy foin.

Chapman.

He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

Job, xxiv. 8.

He could not lose himself, but went about

His father's business. Milton, P. R.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar misits to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Cicero.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my look is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who pursue it with attention and indifference or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices ; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err ; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numb. v. 12.

53. To Go between. To interpose ; to mediate between two.

I did go between them, as I said ; but more than that, he loved her ; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakespeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide.

That laps'd in time and passion, let's go by
To important acting of your dread command ?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

So much the more our career's excellent,

Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her

As she liv'd that us. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

What's that to us ? The time goes by ; away.

Shakespeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever

Goes by the worse, whatever be her cause. Milton, S. A.

He's sure to go by the worse that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Estr.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can accurately judge of the size and form of a stone ; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp, Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed ; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and carnest. L'Estrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffee-house, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Pi.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture.

St. John, x. 9.

60. To Go off. To die ; to go out of life ;
to decess.

I would the friends we miss were safe arriv'd :

Some must go off, and yet, by them I see
So greets a day as this is cheaply bought. Shaks. Mac.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tulzer.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.

The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

62. To Go off. To fire.

As a goose

In death contracts her talons close,
So did the knight, and with one claw

The trick of his pistol draw :
The gun went off. Hudibras, i. ill.

63. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,

Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd it so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. Sh. Jonson, Catiline.

64. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Saturny.

He that decries only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument. Bay, Taylor.

I have received many threats of ill fits by these motions ; if they go on, the only position I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep. Temple.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine forever with new accessions of glory, and brightness to all eternity, is agreeable.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease ; but when the expectoration goes on successfully, not so proper,
because it sometimes suppresseth it.

Arbutnot on Dint.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with care of a. Swift.

When we have found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and inter-lineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary explicatives. Swift.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.

Bp. Berkeley.

65. To Go over. To revolt ; to betake himself to another party.

In the charge of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim,
was used to follow, is now gone over to money.

Swift.

66. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have prick'd me : there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

67. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think't thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation ? Shaks. Hen. F.

Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production ; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about ;
And all her early fires again go out.

Drigden, Aeneas.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered.

Cutler of Friendship.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out by this displeasure.

Addison, Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night.

Poet. V. Punic.

68. To Go out. To proceed formally; still an academical phrase; as, to go out grand compounder.

Now heaven be praised, Silvio;

Thy all-destroying arrows and thy bow
Thou hast plied so well about these woods, that now

Thou art gone out thy arts-master.

Finamore, Past. Fido, p. 146.

69. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

To excite Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it.

Silvery.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there.

Silvery.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands.

Bacon.

His much feared earl of Arundel had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking.

Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it.

South, Scen.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money, in order to go through their part of the expense.

Addison on the War.

70. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo. I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation.

Arbutnot.

71. To Go upon. To take as a principle. This supposition I have gone upon through those papers.

Addison.

72. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come. This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away, and to-morrow comes.

Go to! interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the three poetical examples. It is sometimes also a phrase of exhortation or encouragement, as in the example from Genesis; and of preparation required, as in that from the book of Kings.

They said to one another, Go to, let us make bricks, &c. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach unto heaven.

Gen. xi. 3, 4.

One went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is the maid of Israel. And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel.

St. Jerom. ix. 13, 14.

Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain; whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow.

St. James. i. 15, 16.

Go to them, Othobart recovered soon Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow! Silvery. Let me be clear of thee. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these: Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

Bow.

Go-by. n. s. Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.

Collins on Pride.

Go-cart. n. s. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are tried in go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding.

When members knit, and legs grow stronger, Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. s. [Sax. gobe, zabe, yab; Icel. gadda, to prick.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

How can we get wisdom that holdeth the plough, and that glorieth in the goad, that driven oxen, and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Ecclus. xxxviii. 25.

O! in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [Icel. gadda.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to incite; to drive forward.

Is that temptation, that doth goad us on To sin in loving virtue. Shaks. Mens. for Mens.

Goaded with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues. Shaks. All's well.

Of all that breathe the various progeny, Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

GOAL. n. s. [Gaul. fr. a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields, Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal With rapid wheels. Milton, P. L.

And the slope sun his upward beam Shouts against the dusky pole, Pacing toward the goal. Milton, Commas.

2. The starting post. Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start, The youthful charioteers with heaving heart Rush to the race? Dryden, Virg.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal; But heaven's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone, Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown; Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal; 'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

To GOAN. See To GAUM.

GOAR. v. s. [goror, Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Geir, Icel. a shred. "Goor of a cloth, lacinia."] Prompt. Parv.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it, according to Skinner; but rather a slip of cloth or linen, inserted in order to widen a garment in any particular place.

A goar-coat was, in the time of queen Elizabeth, a gown or petticoat so cut, as to be very broad at the bottom, and narrow at the upper end; as may be observed in the pictures of that period. See Suppl. to Grose's Gloss.

A scint she wored, barred all of silk, A barne-cloth eke as white as morwe milk Upon her lendes, full of many a gore.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

GO'ARISH. adj. [from goar.] Patched; mean; doggerel.

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the garrulous Latin they write in their bonds; and may they write that false, and lose their dates.

Brown, and F. Philaster.

GOAT. n. s. [Gae. Sax. and Scottish; gait, Icel. gaitin, Goth. See the 5th sense of GATE.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Call of goat, and slips of yew. Shaks. Macbeth. We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed Jove, Nor other bluest ones; we are better farre.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peuchan.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove, The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love, Are goat'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid With heaven, and duty rain'd the pious maid. Creech.

GOAT'BEARD. n. s. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOAT'CHAPER. n. s. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOAT'FISH. n. s. [goat and fish.] The name of a fish, caught in the Mediterranean; called also by some caper.

GOAT'THERD. n. s. [gac and hyph, Saxon, a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thine same goatherd proud, That sits on yonder bank, Whose straying herd themselves doth shroud Among the bushes rank? Spenser, Shep. Cal.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Watson.

GOAT'TISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality; as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and taste unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Aethiops.

GOAT'TMARJORAM. n. s. The same with GOAT'SBEARD.

GOAT'TMILK. n. s. [goat and milk.] This is more properly two words.

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatmilk may be necessary. Wicam, Surgery.

GOAT'MILKER. n. s. [goat and milk.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOAT'S RUE. n. s. [Galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharnic and sudorific: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOAT'SKIN. n. s. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine; With water one, and one with sable wine. Pope, Odysseus.

GOA'TRUCKER.* n. s. [goat and sucker.] A name by which the bird caprimulgus is called in some parts of England.

GOA'THORN. n. s. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOA'T. n. s. [goat, old Fr.]

1. A quantity; a lump; a low word, but still in use in the North. Craven Dialect.

Doat think I have so little wit as to part with such a gab of money? L'Esrange.

2. A mouthful, in some parts of England; whence a gab-string also for a bridle, and gab-stick for a spoon. [Irish, gab. See GAB.]

GO'BLET.* n. s. [from gab, the mouth. See GAB.] Old Fr. gab, a gulph; goblet, to swallow.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once; originally a mouth, a small quantity of any thing.

A little sour-dow speirith all the goblet. Wiccliffe, Galat. v. 9.

He seide, he hadde a goblet of the saye. That seide Peter hadde. Chaucer, C. T. Prol. Therewith alle spew'd out of her filthy maw A flood of poison, horrible and black, Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw. Spenser, F. Q.

By devillish policy art thou grown a great, And, like ambitious Sylla, everg'd With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sauvage, Travels.

The giant gor'd with flesh, and wine, and blood, Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den, Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd With purple wine and crudd'd grease confus'd. Addison.

To GO'BLET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Esrange.

GO'BLET.* adv. [from goblet.] In pieces. Obsolete. Huloet.

To GO'BLE.* v. a. [from gab; whence gaber, to swallow, old Fr. See GAB and GOR.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Esrange.

The time too precious now to waste, And supper gobled up in haste, Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

To GO'BLE.* v. n. To make a noise in the throat, as the turkey does. Dr. Johnson confounds this word with the verb active.

Of last year's corn in barn great store; Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior. As a male turkey struggling on the green— Urg'd by endking wrath he gobbling goes. Croble.

GO'BLEOUT.* n. s. [gobble and gut.] A greedy devourer. A low expression.

Sherwood. GO'BLE.* n. s. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO'BETWEEN.* n. s. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came into me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor. They only are the intermediaries, or the go-betweens, of this trim devised mummery.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Def. The broker has his countenance ready to laugh with the merchant, though the abuse is to fall on himself, because he knows that, as a go-between, he shall find his account in being in the good graces of a man of wealth. Tatler, No. 225.

GO'BLETT.* n. s. [Goblet, Fr.; from the Gr. gobletos, a sort of cup; Lat. cupellum; hence cupellet, as it were; and so gobellet, goblet.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

Like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor. Claudian, vii. 2.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd; But free from surfeit our repose is found. Denk. Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught! Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

GO'BLIN.* n. s. [French, gobelin, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibelines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin in Guelph and Gibeline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other; but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those fictions. Elif wilkon are phantoms of the night; and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Goboldi, from which gobelin might be derived. Dr. Johnson.—The word is probably from the Gr. gobolus, a kind of demon, according to the scholiast on the Plutus of Aristophanes; or whist also the low Latin gobelinus. "Dæmon enim, quem de Diane phano expulit, adhuc in eadem urbe degit, et in variis frequentior formis apparet nemi neminem lædit. Hunc vulgus gobelinum appellat." Orderic Vitalis, lib. 5. p. 556. Du Cange represents the goblin as delighting more in mockery than mischief. V. GOBELINUS.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us! Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd, Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell? Shakespeare.

Art thou that traitor angel? Milton, P. L. Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elicol, who overcame The wicked goblines in bloody field; But Elicol was of most renowned fame, Who of all crystal did Panthe build. Spenser, F. Q. Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews With aged cramps. Shakespeare, Tempest. Mean time the village roses up the fire, While well attest'd, and as well believ'd, Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson.

GOD. n. s. [Job, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. St. John, iv. 24.

God above.

Deal between thee and me. Shakespeare, Macb. All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Peters. The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immutable, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Greer, Cosm. Sacra.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 20.

As flies to wanton boys we are to the gods; They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear. Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre waves The fragrant north, and Hyperborean seas, And Scythian colds, and Thracian winter coasts, Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil.

I am not Licio, But one that scorns to live in this disguise, For such a one as leaves a gentleman, And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare. To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man, Lord's above the measure of a father; Nay, godled me, indeed. Shakespeare, Coriol. GOD'S PENNY.* An old expression for an earnest-penny; and used in the north of England.

Young Lo. Come, strike me luck with earnest, and draw the writings.

Merc. There's a God's penny for thee. Bonum, and El. Scornful Lady.

GO'BCHILD. n. s. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER.* n. s. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

How doth my cousin, your bedfellow! and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen? Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

GO'DDESS. n. s. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddesses, hear a father! Shakespeare.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee: My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love. Shaks. I long have waited in the temple inn, Bullit to the gracious goddess Clemency! But rev'rence thou the poor's. Dryden, Fab.

From his seat the goddess born arose, And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden, Fab. When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison.

Modesty withheld the goddess' train. Pope, Odyssey.

GO'DDESS-LIKE.* adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess. Mr. Malone thinks this epithet not common, and Dr. Johnson has cited only an example from Pope. The following examples will prove the frequency and the propriety of its use.

Your high self,

The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and, now, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shaks. W. of T.
More goddess-like than wife-like. Shaks. Cymb.
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays. Shaks. Peric.
In comely garments, like some virgin maid
Of Dan's troupe, she trimm'd was array'd.
Save, goddess-like, her globe-like head around
With verdant wreath of sacred bay was crown'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 782.

With goddess-like domestic forth she went.

Milton, P. L.

She — Della's self

In gait surpass'd and goddess-like deport.

Milton, P. L.

Th' a female voices from the shore I heard;
A unaid amidst them goddess-like appear'd.

Pope, Ode on

GODFATHER † n. s. [god and father, Sax. godesfaþer. See also GODMOTHER.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godf. ther to his child.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GODHEAD † n. s. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the glory equal, the majesty coeternal. Athanas. Creed.

Be content;

Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

At the holy mount

Of heaven's high-seated top, the imperial throne
Of Godhead, sit'd for ever firm and sure,

The final pow'r arriv'd. Milton, P. L.

So may thy godhead be confess'd,

As the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.

Acts, xiv. 29.

Were your goddesses in borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakspeare, Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,

The nymphs and native goddesses yet unknown.

Dryden, En.

GODLESS † adj. [*Sax. *godels.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hosier.

My lords, he bade me say, that you may know

How much he scorns, and (as good princes ought)

Defies base, indirect, and godless treacheries.

Brewin, and Fl. Laws of Candy.

That godless crew

For faults not his, but guilt and crimes

Of false men, and of rebellious times,

Him his ungrateful country sent,

Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GODLESSNESS † n. s. [*from *godless.] The state of being wicked.

The sinner gives himself over to a wild and loose profane; to a lawless course of godlessness. Bp. Hall, Rom. p. 87.

GO-DLIKE † adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest brought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.

Milton, P. L.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin

Of saviour to mankind, and which way first

Polish his godlike office new mature. Milt. P. R.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Lubbock.

GODLILY † adv. [*from *godly.] This is the true word, though the repetition of the syllable is certainly harsh. See the adverb GODLY.] Righteously; piously.

Enjoining them upon the severest penalties to live godlily, boldly, and righteously in this present world. Hen. Wharton, Sermon (1697), l. 114.

GODLING † n. s. [*from *god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

The puny godlings of inferior race.

Whose humble statues are coexistent with brasses.

Dryden, Jun.

He preserved a young plump godling called Bacchus, after the death of his mother Semle.

Gaston on D. Quix. p. 241.

GODLINESS † n. s. [*from *godly.]

1. Piety to God.

Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness. 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hosier.

GODLY † adj. [*Sax. *godelic.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man croucheth, for the faithful fall among the children of men. Ps. xli. 1.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Perron.

GODLY † adv. Piously; righteously. By the repetition it should be godlily, but the harshness of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul toucheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hosier.

GODLYHEAD † n. s. [*from *godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word, Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Spenser, in which, however, the true word is goodghend. See GOODLYHEAD.

GODMOTHER † n. s. [god and mother, Sax. godesmoþer.] A woman who has undertaken sponsorship in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

There shall be for every male child to be baptized two godfathers and one godmother; and for every female, two godmothers, and one godfather.

Rubric, Comm. Prayer.

The duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child (the princess Elizabeth) richly habited in a mantle; the marchioness of Dorset, the other godmother, and ladies. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VIII.

GODSHIP † n. s. [*from *god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity. Perhaps not used in a serious sense. Discouraging largely on this theme, O'er hills and dales their godships canna. Prior.

Venus
Trudg'd it away to Jove's high court,
And there his godship did entreat
To look out for his best receipt.

Singh, ed. Horret. p. 95.

GODSIE † See GOSPIR.

GODSMITH † n. s. [god and smith.] A maker of idols.

Gods they had tried of every shape and size,
That godsmiths could produce, or priests divine.

Depley, Aps. and Apsit.

GODSON † n. s. [god and son, Sax. gods-sonu.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgus?

Shakspeare.

GODWARD † adv. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Had Arethusa tenus, for hactenus Arethusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward.

2 Cor.

What the eye of a bat is to the sun, the same is all human understanding to Godward.

Hawth. Lett. ii. 11.

GODWIT † n. s. [god, good, and wit, an animal. Dr. Johnson. — From the Icel. god, good, and veidr, prey taken in hunting, or viat, food. Serenius.] A bird of particular delicacy.

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calver'd sal.

Knott, banquets, godwits. B. Jonson, Alchemid.

Not oracles nor godwits crown'd his baird.

Conley.

GODYELD † adv. [corrupted from God]

GODYELD † shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should lud godlyd us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakspeare, Mac.

GOLTE † adj. [*Sax. godelpe, yellow; Su.*

Goth. gal. This word must be pronounced gold; and is of the same family as gold. Goel or gule is used in Suffolk and Essex for yellow.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the farthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-mosses will chosen let skillful gon wot,
The goaler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove.

Tusser.

GOTES † part. pret. of go; formerly so written, and indeed rightly.

GOER † n. s. [*from *go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africa both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a cup to these younger times:
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate
them.

But goers backward. Shakspeare, All's well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimate with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

3. One that transacts business between two parties. In an ill sense. See GO-BETWEEN.

Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars. Shakespeare, Tr. and Crea.

4. A term often applied to a horse; as, he is a good goer, a safe goer.

In the rough French horse brought to the door? They say he is a high goer. I shall soon try his mettle. Brown, and El. Cypid's Revenge

5. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast Adward his shoulders, his faire gowne greit With fitted shoon. Chapman.

GO'ETV.* n. s. [Fr. goëtic; Gr. γῆναι, enchantment.] A kind of magic; an invocation of evil spirits.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the gower, which they called magick or goety.

Hollywell, Melanor (1681), p. 51.
GOFF* n. s. [old French, goff, rude, blockish, clownish.]

1. A foolish clown. North. Grose. Sometimes pronounced goff.

2. A game. See GOL.

3. A mow of hay or corn. Essex. Grose. Of uncertain etymology.

He was in his barn stacking up a goff of corn. Fair, cited by Wood, Ath. Ox. i. 392.

GO'FISH.* adj. [from goff.] Foolish; imbecile.

Beware of goffish peep's speech, That dremen things, which that never were. Chaucer, Tr. and Crea. iii. 585.

GOH.* n. s. [perhaps from the Goth. goh, the way. See AGON.] Haste; desire to go.

You have put me into such a goh of going, I would not stay for all the world. Brown, and El. Wit without Money.

TO GO'GGLE.* v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology; Johnson derives it from the Lat. coxæ, having one eye only; and Wicliffe uses gogil yghed for having one eye, St. Mark, ix. 47. Serenius offers the Icel. gagr, prominent, which is not improbable, the meaning of goggle being not to look askant, which is the definition given of the word by Dr. Johnson; but rather to have full eyes, a kind of prominent look. See both the substantive and adjective.] To strain the eyes; to roll the eyes.

A huge giant stiffe and starke, All foule of limbe and lere, Two goggling eyes like fire.

Sir Cuthbert, Percy's Rel. of Anc. Poetry.
Such sight have they that see gibgoggling eyes. Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

Infam'd all over with disgrace, To be seen by her in such a place, Which made him hang his head, and scowl,

And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.
Near sight, nor graine, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GO'GGLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] 1. A stare; a bold or strained look.

Do ye stare goggles? I hope to make winter boots of thy hide yet. Brown, and El. X. of Malta.
Others will have such a divided face between a devout goggle and an inviting glance, that the unnatural mixture will make the best look to be at that time ridiculous. Lord Hailford.

2. In the plural only, both blinds for horses that are apt to take fright, and glasses worn by persons to defend the eyes from dust or the heat of the sun. Both these senses are modern, and rather vulgar.

GO'GGLE.* adj. Staring; having full eyes.

Frowning he cotes — And looking on me with the goggle eye. Mrs. for Mag. p. 427.

Give him admonition to fore-see his safety-glittering grace, and his goggle eye. H. Jenson, Postmaster.

That rolls one goggle eye in its vast brow, Like a grim Cyclop. Fenwick, Post. Fid. p. 113.

GO'GGLE-EYED* adj. [from goggle and eye. See the etym. of TO GO'GGLE.] Having eyes ready to start, as it were, out of the head.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Acham, Schoolmaster.

Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed, — bald, goggle-eyed, lean-eyed, or with staring eyes, heavy, dull, hollow-eyed, black or yellow about the eyes, or squint-eyed. Barton, Anat. of Mch. p. 324.

GO'GOLLE.* adj. [from goggle.] Prominent; starting.

Ugly faced, with long black hair, goggled eyes, wide-mouthed. Sir T. Herbert, Trans. p. 56.

GO'ING.* n. s. [from go.] 1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their tailors' tutors, No heretics burnt, but wench's suitors, Then comes the time, who lives to see's, That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakespeare, A. Lear.

2. Pregnancy. The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Green, Custom. Stern.

3. Departure. Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton, P. L.

4. Proceeding; series of conduct. In colloquial language we say, going-on.

His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings. Jab. xxxiv. 21.

TO GO'KE.* To stupify. See TO GOWK.

GO'LA.* n. s. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a corner the gola, or cymatum of the corner, the coping, the medallion or dentelle make a noble show. Addison, Spect. No. 415.

GOLD.* n. s. [Saxon; gold, riches, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geol, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is golden, and signifies in Latin where, in English to be of price or value; hence coueth their ordinary word gold, for money.]

Peacem on Drawing. Dr. Johnson. — Others, noticing the Icel. gulde, gold, consider gul, yellow, as the origin. See GOL.

Serenius and Wachter deduce it from the Icel. gulde, value, price.]

1. Gold is the most valuable of all metals, more malleable and ductile than any other, exceeding all in weight except platinum, and of a bright yellowish colour; assuming, when melted, that of a bluish-green.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, cleanness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

As! Buckingham, how do I ply the touch, To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only try the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Lucas.

The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat, He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden, Tyr. Loe.

2. Money. For us, the gold of France did not seduce, Although I did admit it as a motive

The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Thou that so stoutly hast resisted rage, Give us thy gold, if thou hast any gold; For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

The old man's god, his gold, has won upon her. Brown, Ann. Fl. 1.5. The Thief.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρῆμα ἀπαιτι; and "anionique moresque aureos educit in astra." Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold, A lad of life, an lap of fame. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. A flower. Jalovic.

That werel of yelow g-*g*des a gerlond. Chaucer, A. Tale.

The crimsin durrell flower, the bluebottle, and gold, Which, though eestein'd but weeds, yet for their dainty bevs

And for their scent not ill, they for this purpose use. Drayton, Polyd. S. 15.

GOLD OF PLEASURE.* n. s. [mygymur.] A plant.

GOLDBEATEN.* adj. [gold and beat.] Gilded; covered with gold.

In many gay garments that were goldebeaten. Purser, Ploughmen's Creed.

GOLDBEATER.* n. s. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gold.

Our goldebeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Bogb.

GOLDBEATER'S SKIN.* n. s. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldebeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GOLDBOUND.* adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air, Thou other goldebound brow, is like the first. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

GOL'DEN.* adj. [Sax. golden.] 1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

The golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up. Isa. xli. 5.

O would that God that the inclusive gold Of golden metal, that must round my brow, Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain! Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet it is the golden sun gives out
Through those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bloom of the deep. Shaks.
The letter to be lovely born.

Than wear a golden sorrow. Shaks. Hen. VIII.
Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crusoe.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.
And see the guardian angel of the good,
Beckoning soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat
Under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Morimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

Golden opinions I have bought
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call golden,
has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.
Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others, as we would have others deal with us.

Watts, Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day,
and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

GoLD'EN Number. n. s. The number, which shews the year of the moon's cycle.

This was invented, long before our Saviour's nativity, by Meton the Athenian, from whence it was styled the Metonic cycle; till afterwards it changed its name, being either from its great usefulness in ascertaining the moon's age, or else from its being written in letters of gold, called the golden number; though sometimes, for the first of these reasons, it is called the cycle of the moon.
Wheatley on the Common Prayer.

GoLD'EN Rod. n. s. [irriga aurea.] A plant.

GoLD'EN Rule. n. s. In arithmetic, the Rule of Three, or Rule of Proportion.

GoLD'EN Saxifrage. n. s. [chrysosplenium.]
An herb.

GoLD'ENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

GoLD'FINCH. n. s. [colymbus, SAXON.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.

If singing birds they have linnetts, goldfinches, rushlocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Cervus.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hop'd from side to side.
Dryden.

GoLD'FINDER. n. s. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that chafes at night,
He suck'd his vitals through a quill;
Unconscious it pass'd between his grinders,
Or 't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

GoLDHAMMER. n. s. A kind of bird. Dict.

GoLD'ING. n. s. A sort of apple. Dict.

GoLDHIL'TED. adj. [Sax. zolhiltceb.]
Having a golden hilt; a phrase applied to a sword.

Beaten gold.

GoLDSEY. n. s. A sort of fish, otherwise called gilthead. Dict.

GoLDPLEASURE. n. s. An herb. Dict.

GoLDPROOF. adj. [gold and proof.]
Able to resist the temptation of gold.

This is most strange: Art thou goldproof?
There's for thee. Heaven and Fl. Moid's Tragedy.

GoLD'SIZE. n. s. A glue of a golden colour; glue used by gilders.

The gum of ivy is good to put into your goldsize, and other colours. Feachon on Drawing.

GoLD'SMITH. n. s. [Sax. zolbrymð.]
1. One who manufactures gold.

Neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Shaks.

2. A banker; one who keeps money for others in his hands.

They [bankers] were a tribe that had risen and grown up in Cromwell's time, and never were heard of before the late troubles, till when the whole trade of money had passed through the hands of the scrivners: they were for the most part goldsmiths, men known to be so rich, and of so good reputation, that all the money of the kingdom would be trusted or deposited in their hands. Le. Cleveland, Left, II. 597.

The goldsmith or scrivner, who takes all your fortune to dispose of, when he has beforehand resolved to break the following day, does surely deserve the gallows. Swift.

Borrowed 300*l.* of a goldsmith upon my ticketh.
Spectator, vol. ix. (1715), No. 14.

GoLD'LOCKS. n. s. [coma aurea, Latin.]
A plant.

Fair ox-eye, goldlocks, and columbine.
B. Jonson, Masques.

GOLF. n. s. [Dutch and Sw. kolf, a club;
kolf is also a Dutch game played in an enclosed area with clubs and balls.] A game played with a ball and a club or bat; formerly called bandy-ball. It consists in driving the ball from one hole to another; and he who drives his ball into the hole with the fewest strokes, is the winner. It is a common game in Scotland: See Dr. Jamieson's Etym.
Scot. Dict. in V. Golf. Strutt says, that it is also used in the north of England.

Golf was a fashionable game among the nobility at the commencement of the seventeenth century, and it was one of the exercises with which prince Henry, eldest son to James the first, occasionally amused himself.

Strutt, Sports and Pastimes of the People of England.

Golf and foot-ball appear to have been prohibited in Scotland by king James the second in 1457. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GOLL. n. s. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from pal or pol, whence pealban, to handle or manage. Dr. Johnson.—
May it not be a more easy corruption of the Greek γάλα, (gualon), the palm of the hand?] Hands; paws; claws. Used in contempt.

They set hands, and Mopsa put her golden gills among them; and blind fortune, that saw not the colour of them, gave her the pre-eminence.

Sidney.

Make 'em hold up their spread galls.
B. Jonson, Festivities.

With her
To wash her hands in her or flour;
And do you, in like manner, scour
Your dirty galls. Setton, Virg. B. 4.

GoLD'EN. n. s. [Irish, gleire, plenty,
a great deal; Gael. leor, go leor, enough;
Shaw; gleore, Scottish; Jamieson in V.
GLEORE.] Abundance. Still used in many parts of England. See also GLOZE.

GOM. n. s. [Goth. guma, Sax. yuma;
Germ. gomo, a man.] A man. Obsolete.

I Gloton, quoth the gome, gylty me yelde,
That I have trespassed with tong.

P. Ploughman's Vision.
This term remained on the English stage till the time of Charles the first. It occurs in The Widow, which was acted in that reign with much applause.

*Rich. Say you, sir?—
I'll try your ladyship, faith.—Lady, well met.
Fren. I do not think so, sir.*

Rich. A scornful groom.

On which passage the commentator observes,
(Old Pl. vol. xii. p. 245.) that Jucius in his Etymologicon says, that gom or gome signifies a man.
Richards therefore means, that Francisco, in his assumed character of a woman, acts not with the softness and delicacy of a female, but with the scorn and laughings of a male.

Whiter, Etymolog. Mag. p. 335.

Go'MAN. n. s. [from gom.] A man,
simply; not a Goodman, an householder,
a master of a family, as Verstegan, Bailey, and others have asserted. Obsolete.

From this name for man under the form of gom,
gome, gomer, &c. the etymologists have rightly derived gomer, which some have illy conceived to be quasi gomer. Whiter.

GoME. n. s. The black grease of a cartwheel. Dr. Johnson thus gives this word, without any etymology, from Bailey. It is probably a corruption of oom. See OOM.

GoMPHO'SIS. n. s. [Gr. γήμωνις, from γήμος, a nail; old French, gom-phose. Cotgrave.] A particular form of articulation.

Gomphosis is the connexion of a tooth to its socket. Wiseeman.

GoNDOLA. n. s. [gondole, French;
gondola, Ital. and low Lat. navicula;
Græcobarbar. a kind of little vessel, "ex idiomate Italico, gondola." Meursius.

Some derive it from the Gr. κίνη, a sort of vase.] A boat much used in Venice;
a small boat.

He saw did swim
Along the shore, as swift as glance of eye,
A little gondole, bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly. Spenner, F. Q.

In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica. Shakspeare.

As with gondolas and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice
Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring. Prior.

GONDOLIER. n. s. [Fr. gondolier, Cot-grave; gondolieri, Ital.] A boatman;
one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the gross calves of a lascivious Moor. Shakspeare, Othello.

GONE. part. preter. [from go. See To Go.]

1. Advanced; forward in progress.

I have known sheep cured of the rot, when they have not been far gone of it, only by being put into broadlands. Meton.

The observer is much the bricker of the two, and, I think, farther gone of late in lies and impudence than his Presbyterian brother. Swift.

2. Ruined; undone.

He must know 'tis none of your daughter, nor my sister: we are gone else. Shaks. Hist. Tale.

3. Past.

I'll tell thee the story of my life,
And the particular accidents gone by,
Since I came to this isle. Shakespeare, Temp.

4. Lost; departed.

When her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas.

Speech is confined to the living, and imparted to only those that are in presence, and is transient and gone. Holder.

5. Dead; departed from life.

I mourn Adonis dead and gone. Oldham.
A dog, that has his nose held in the vapour, loses all signs of life; but carried into the air, or thrown into a lake, recovers, if not quite gone.

Addison on Italy.

GONFALON.† n. s. [gonfalon, Fr. gonfalon, gonfalon, gonfalon, Icelandic, from gonn, a battle, and fani, a flag.

Lye. Dr. Johnson.—Our old word is gonfalon, which Chaucer uses. Milton introduced gonfalon into our language immediately from the Italian gonfalon, which is a chief standard, the name of the pope's standard, and often occurs in Ariosto. The gonfalon is described by the French as a little square flag, or pennon, at the end of a lance.] An ensign; a standard.

He that bare the ensigne
Of worship, and the gonfalon.

Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1201.
Ten thousand thousand ensigns had advanc'd,
Standards and gonfons, twist with gear,
Stream in the air. Milton, P. L.

GONFALONI.† n. s. [old Fr. gonfalonier, and gonfalonier; Ital. gonfaloniere.]
A chief standard-bearer.

Had she not [Florence] her private counsels debating, her great council resolving, and her magistrates executing? Was not the rotation too provided for by the annual election of her gonfalonier?

By. Wren, Monarchy Ascerted, (1689), ch. 10.

GONG.

n. s.
1. A draught, or privy; a joke. [Sax. ganz, ganz, a passage.] Obsolete.

Halcat.
A commune gang, whereas men purge their ordure.

Chaucer, Pers. Tale.

2. An instrument of a circular form, made of brass, which the Asiatics strike with a large wooden mallet; the sound of which is heard at a great distance. It has been introduced into this country in some of the entertainments of the stage and of country fairs.

The Chinese believe that during eclipses of the sun and moon these celestial bodies are attacked by a great serpent, to drive away which they strike their gongs or brassen drums.

Douce, Illustr. of Shakespeare, l. 29.

GONIO-METER.† n. s. [Fr. goniometre, from the Gr. gonia, an angle, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring angles.

Vol. II.

GONIOMETRICAL.† adj. See GONIOMETER. Goniometrical lines are lines used for measuring or determining the quantity of angles. Such are sines, tangents, secants, &c. Chambers.

GONORRHOEA.† n. s. [gonorrhoe and gonorrhoea.]
A morbid running of venereal humors.

Heavy mummy or stone mummy grown on the tops of high rocks: they powder and boil it in milk, and then give it to stop gonorrhoea.

Woodward on Fossils.

GOOD.† adj. comp. better, superl. best.

1. Having, either generally or for any particular end, such physical qualities as are expected or desired. Not bad; not ill.

God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. Gen. i. 31.

A universe of death! which God by curse Created evil; for evil only good. Milton, P. L.

Resolved
From an ill cause to draw a good effect.

Dryden, Fob.
Notwithstanding this criticism the verses were good. Spectator.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

The very foundation of poetry is good sense, if we may allow Horace to be a judge of the art. Addison, Tattle, No. 240.

Ah! 'twere no dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the crick let the man be lost!
Good nature and good sense must ever join;
To be human, to forgive divine. Pope.

2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state: amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.

If you think good, give Martius leave. Bacon.
It was a good time to comply with the impetuosity of the gentlemen of Sussex. Clerendun.

3. Conducive to happiness.
It is not good that the man should be alone. Gen. ii. 18.

We may as well pretend to obtain the good which we want without God's assistance, as to know what is good for us without his direction. By. Smalridge, Scen.

4. Unhurt; undamaged.
He also battered away plums, that would have rotted in a week, for ains, that would last good for his eating a whole year. Locke.

5. Wholesome; salubrious.
A man first builds a country seat,
Then finds the walls not good to eat. Prior.

6. Medicinal; salutary.
The water of Nilus is sweeter than other waters in taste, and it is excellent good for the stone and hypochondriack melancholy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. Pleasant to the taste.
Eat thou honey, because it is good; and the honeycomb which is sweet. Prov. xiv. 13.

Of herbs and plants some are good to eat raw; as lettuce, endive, and purslane. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

8. Complete; full.
The Protestant subjects of the abbey made up a good third of its people. Addison on Italy.

9. Useful; valuable.
All quality, that is good for any thing, is originally founded upon merit. Collier on Envy.

We discipline betimes those other creatures we would make useful and good for somewhat. Locke.

10. Sound; not false; not fallacious.

He is resolved now to show how slight the propositions were which Luther let go for good. Atterbury.

11. Legal; valid; rightly claimed or held.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship in the same regiment. Watson.

12. Confirmed; attested; valid.
Hail, am I sure she's wrong'd? 'Tis sure she's malice!
Slave, snake it clear, make good your accusation. Smith.

13. With as preceding. It has a kind of negative or inverted sense; as good as, no better than.

Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, so many as the stars of the sky in multitude. Heb. xi.

14. With as preceding. No worse.
He sharply reproved them as men of no courage, which, being many times as good as in possession of the victory, had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knox.

The master will be as good as his word, for his own business. L'Estrange.

15. Well qualified; not deficient.
If they had held their royalties by that title, either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

16. Skilful; ready; dexterous.
Flatter him it may, I confess; as those are generally good at flattering who are good for nothing else. South.

I make my way where e'er I see for my foe;
But you, my lord, are good at a retreat. Dryden.

17. Happy; prosperous.
(He) on the other side did so farre
From making or grudging his good with her,
That, all he could, he grac'd him with her. Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 39.

Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Ps. cxxxiii. 1.

Many good morrows to my noble lord!
— Good morrow, Catesby, you are early stirring. Shakespeare.

Good e'en, neighbours;
Good e'en to you all, good e'en to you all. Shakespeare, Curial.

At my window bid good morrow. Milton, L'Al.
Good morrow, Portius! let us once embrace. Addison.

18. Honourable.
They cast to build
A city and tower, whose top may reach to heaven;
And get themselves a name; and —
Regardless whether good or evil fame. Milton, P. L.

Silence, the knave's reputation, the whore's good name,
The only honour of the wishing dame. Pope.

19. Cheerful; gay. Joined with any words expressing temper of mind.

They may be of good comfort, and ever go cheerfully about their own affairs. 2 Mac. ii. 26.

There was but one who kept up his good humour to the Land's-end. Addison, Tattle, No. 129.

Quintus improves lust cheerfulness, enough to make me just as good humoured as to wish that world well. Pope.

20. Considerable; not small, though not very great.

A good while ago God made choice that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word. Acts, vi. 7.

The plant having a great stalk and top, doth prey upon the grass a good way about, by drawing the juice of the earth from it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Mistle and pomegranate, if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, will meet.

Preacher on Drivings.
The king had provided a good fleet, and a body of three thousand foot to be embarked. Clarendon.
We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthly particles, so as many of them might float in the air a good while, like exhalations before they fell down.

Burnet, Theory.
They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate; with breeding.

If the critic has published nothing but rules and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and delicacy in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his railway.

Addison, Guardian.
Masking has been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding. Addison, Spect.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good breeding. Swift.

22. Real; serious; not feigned.

Love not in good earnest, nor no further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

23. Rich; of credit; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man; my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
I'm call'd for now in haste by master Meer-craft.

To trust master Fitz-dottrel, a good man;
I have enquir'd him, eighteen hundred a year, &c.
B. Jonson, Dev. in an Act.

24. Having moral qualities, such as are wished; virtuous; pious; religious; applied both to persons and actions. Not bad; not evil.

For a good man some would even dare to die.

Rom. v. 7.

The woman hath wrought a good work upon me.

St. Mat.

All man's works on me,
Good or not good, ingrat my merit, these
Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.

Milton, P. L.

What reward
Awaits the good, the rest what punishment.

Milton, P. L.

The only Son of light
In a dark age, against example good,
Against allurement.

Milton, P. L.

Such follow him, as shall be registered
Part good, part bad, of bad the larger scroll.

Milton, P. L.

Grant the bad what happens they would,
Oase they must want, which is to pass for good.

Pope.

Why drew Marcellus' good bishop purer breath,

Pope.

When nature sick'n'd, and each gale was death?
Pope.

Such was Roscommon, not more learn'd than good,

With manners green 'tous as his noble blood. Pope.
No farther intercourse with heav'n had he,
But left good works to men of low degree.

Harte.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being so turned in her, that where at first liking her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners.

Selden.

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace,
good will towards men.

St. Luke, ii. 14.

Without good nature man is but a better kind of vermin.

Bacon.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love;
Good nature now and passion strive.

Which of the two should be above,
And laws unto the other give.

Locke.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for man.

Locke.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity,
'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,
'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd.

Denham.

To teach him betimes to love and be good natur'd to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man.

Locke.

Good sense and good nature are never separated,
though the ignorant world has thought otherwise.

Locke.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original signification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of daily use.

Dryden.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very spirit and life of our Saviour's whole institution?

Spratt.

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind.

Calamy, Serm.

A cheerful temper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful, and wit make good natur'd.

Addison, Tatler, No. 129.

How could you cide the young good natur'd prince,

And drive him from you with so stern an air?

Addison, Cato.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt.

1 Sam. xiv. 15.

Truly God is good to Israel, even so such as are of a clean heart.

Psalms lxxiii. 1.

You have good remembrance of us always,
desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you.

1 Thes. iii. 6.

This idea must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else, but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination.

Locke.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry.

Often used ironically.

If he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find [him] the best king of good fellows.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

Even in the soul of some good fellowship.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Excellent sir, I know you use to sip
Much of the Muses' fair good fellowship.

Jordan's Poems.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well.

Clarendon.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship.

Locke.

It was well known, that Sir Roger had been a good fellow, in his youth.

Arbuthnot.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill. Dr. Johnson says. Yet both the examples imply merely an husband.

See GOODMAN.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.

Addison, Spect.

29. In a ludicrous sense.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to loose themselves in the sunshine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.

Spratt on Ireland.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious.

He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called unto us to follow him, which was both, bound by oath and willing by good will, obeyed.

Steady.

The good will of the oation to the present war has been since but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it.

Temple.

Good will, she said, my want of strength supplies;

And diligence shall give what age denies.

Dryden, Fsk.

31. In Good sooth. Really; seriously.

What, must I hold a candle to my flames?
They is themselves, good sooth, are too too light.

Shakespeare.

32. In Good time. Not too fast.

In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools.

Cotton on Human Reason.

33. In Good time. Opportunely.

Pr. Fye, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not.

To tell us whether they will come or no.

Back. And in good time here comes the sweating lord.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

34. In Good time. A colloquial expression for time enough; as, we are in good time for the occasion.

35. Good [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon.

There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given.

He forced them to retire in spite of their dragoons, which were placed there to make good their retreat.

Clarendon.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are obliged above others to conform to the proper maxims and virtues that belong to this household.

Spratt.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues;
As honour made him first the danger choose,
So still he makes it good on virtue's score.

Dryden.

36. Good [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I farther will maintain
Upon his life to make as his good.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual accession.

Pearson.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good.

Smolridge.

37. Good [To make.] To perform.

While she so far extends her grace,
She makes but good the promise of her face.

Waller.

38. Good [To make.] To supply.

Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another.

L'Estrange.

GOOD, n. s.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us.

Til. Andronicus.

Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me.

Shakespeare, Mids. Night Dr.

He wad' indifferently twist them, doing neither good nor harm.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Lore with fear the only God.

Merchful over all his works, with good

Still overcoming evil.

Milton, P. L.

God is also in sleep, and dreams advice,

Which he hath sent propitious, some great good

Pressaging.

Milton, P. L.

Nature in man's heart her laws doth pen,

Prescribing truth to wit, and good to will.

The lessening or escaping of evil is to be reckoned under the notion of good: the lessening or loss of good is to be reckoned under the notion of evil.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do.

Locke.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us: or else to procure or preserve us the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil.

Locke.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon,

And for the church's good defer thy pain.

Works may have more wit than does them good.

As bodies perish through excess of blood.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force.

Rogers.

2. Prosperity; advancement.

If he had employ'd

Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature

Unto the good, not ruin, of the state.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

3. Earnest; not jest.

The good woman never died after this, till she came to die for good and all.

L'Extrange.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable: virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil, and do good.

Psalm xxxiv.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify; but no good, no not e purposed good, can make evil good.

Holyday.

O nose, like one of us is man become,

To know both good and evil, since his taste

Of that defended fruit, but let him boast

His knowledge of good lost, and evil got,

Happier had it suffic'd him to have known

Good by itself, and evil not at all.

Milton, P. L.

Empty of all good, wherein consists

Woman's domestic honour, and chief praise.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called, bonum honestum ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of goods, or pleasure, the bonum utile, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here.

South.

Nor holds this virtue a more deserving knight

For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,

Truth, honour, all that is compris'd in good.

Dryden.

5. Property. See GOODS. Not now in use.

Farewell my good, for it is all gone.

Chaucer, Somn. Tale.

Moreover, because I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, and shew'd all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold.

1 Chron. xii. 3.

6. That which is right and fit. See the second sense of the adjective.

In word and deed that shew'd great modesty,

And knew his good to all of each degree.

Spenser, F. Q. i. c. 7.

7. Good placed after had, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See GOOD, adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he will be at good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.

South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in e wilderness as in a society.

L'Extrange.

GOOD.† adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. Reasonably; as, good cheap. See CHEAP.

Victuals shall be at good cheap upon this, that they shall think themselves to be in good case.

2 Esdr. xvi. 21.

3. As GOOD. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side, As good have grown there still e lifeless rib.

Milton, P. L.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?

L'Extrange.

GOOD. Interj. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

To GOOD. v. a. [Su. Goth. gorda.] To manure.

A fruitful hill not by nature, but by grace: nature was like itself in it, in the world: God hath taken it from the barren downs, and gooded it.

By. Hall, Fast Ser. (1698.)

The husbandman looks out for a crop in the wild desert; but where he hath gooded, and plowed, and sowed, and sown, why should he not look for an harvest?

By. Hall, Rem. p. 121.

*GOOD-BE'EDING.* n. s.* Elegance of manners derived from a good education.

See the nineteenth sense of the adjective GOOD.

*GOOD-BY.* adv.* [a contraction of God, or good be with you.] A familiar way of bidding farewell. It should be written, properly, good-b'ye.

GOOD-CONDITIONED. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned.

Sharp, Surgery.

*GOOD-DEN.* adv.* A form of wishing, a compliment, which has been generally considered a corruption of good even; but Mr. Pegge says that it is a contraction of good-dayen, the Saxon plural of day. Good-den or good-en, however, is, in the provincial Glossary of Yorkshire words, the wish of a good evening.

The phrase good den is frequent in our old language.

*GOOD-E'VEN.** See the seventeenth sense of the adjective GOOD, and GOOD-DEN.

GOOD-FELLOW.† n. s. A jolly companion.

See the twenty-seventh sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-FELLOWSHIP.† n. s. Merry or jolly society. See the twenty-seventh sense of the adjective GOOD.

To GOOD-FELLOW. v. a. To make a jolly companion; to besot.

Let me rather be disliked for not being a beast, than be good-fellowed with a lug for being one: Some laugh at me for being sober; and I laugh at them for being drunk.

Feltham, Rec. i. 84.

GOOD-HUMOUR.† n. s. A cheerful and agreeable temper of mind. See the nineteenth sense of the adjective GOOD.

GOOD-HUMOURED.† adj. Cheerful. See the nineteenth sense of GOOD.

*GOOD-NATUREDLY.* adv.* [from good-natured.] In a kind, benevolent manner.

She very good-naturedly answered, she had received that palsy fellow we just parted from, merely because he had a superior share of ease and freedom!

The Student, i. 114.

They good-naturedly invited me to their party.

Groves, Recoll. of Sheridan, p. 16.

GOOD-NOW. Interj.

1. In good time; à la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of intreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now, at down, and tell me, he that knows, Why this same watch?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!

Dryden, Span. Friar.

GOOD-SENSE.† n. s. See the first definition of the adjective GOOD.

*GOOD-SPEED.* n. s.* [from good and speed. "And so good-speed me!" Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.] An old form of wishing success; success itself.

I know, down me I must;

And good-speed send me.

Middleton's Witch.

GOOD-WILL.† n. s.

1. Benevolence; kindness. See the twenty-fifth sense of the adjective GOOD.

2. Earnestness; heartiness. See the thirtieth sense of the adjective GOOD.

*GOO'DING.* adj.* To go a gooding, is a custom observed in several parts of England on St. Thomas's day by women only, who ask alms, and in return for them wish all that is good, such as a happy new year, &c. to their benefactors, sometimes presenting them also with sprigs of ever-greens. In some parts of Surrey and Kent, the custom is thus kept up; and in other countries

gooding is the word, among the poor, for collecting before Christmas what may enable them to keep the festival.

*GOO'LESS.* adj.* [good and less.] Without goods or money.

G O 2

Goodies for to ben it is no game.
